SYRIANS REPORT MOVES TO PACIFY 2 LEBANON AREAS

New Intervention Coincides
With Reports of Troops
Being Sent by Damascus

Special to The New York Times
BEIRUT, Lebanon, Tuesday, June 1—Syria said last night that it had intervened in northern Lebanon to stop the fighting around beleaguered Christian villages near the Syrian border that had been heavily shelled for several days.
Radio Damascus said that Syrian "delegates" went to the region just inside Lebanon in response to popular requests addressed to President Hafez al-Assad by local citizens. It was reported that the Syrians had brought about a meeting of combatants from both sides that ended the fighting.
Leftist Lebanese and Palestinian sources here charged yesterday that Syria had increased the number of its troops in Lebanon during the last 48 hours. The reports could not be confirmed. [United Press International reported that leftist and rightist sources said an armored regiment of the Syrian Army—about 2,000 men—had crossed the border.]

Syrian Role in Dispute
The Syrian announcement was certain to intensify the controversy here about Syria's role in Lebanon.
Lebanese politicians, both Moslems and some Christians, have accused Syria of having provoked the fighting in northern Lebanon through its own military officers to find an excuse for a new intervention.

The area involved is the Akkar region. The villages, which are about two miles from the Syrian border, are called Qobayt and Andakht.
They had been under constant attack from a force commanded by Maj. Ahmed al-Masri, a Moslem who at one point identified himself with the so-called Lebanese Arab Army of Lieut. Ahmed al-Khatib, an ally of Ksamt Jumblat, the leader of the leftist-Moslem alliance.

Instructions from Damascus
Mr. Jumblat and Raymond Edde, the Christian who was vetoed by Syria as a presidential candidate three weeks ago, both accused the Syrians yesterday of intending to annex parts of Lebanon in a "conspiracy with the United States."
Mr. Jumblat said that there was an "Arab-American agreement" for the partition of Lebanon into Syrian, Christian and Palestinian parts.

Mr. Edde made a similar charge in several interviews with Beirut newspapers.
He said that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger was engaged in a "conspiracy to give Lebanon to Syria" as a means of taking pressure off Israel and bringing peace to the Middle East.

The day was relatively quiet in Beirut following one of the worst weekends of the war.

TUITION AT CITY U. UP FOR APPROVAL BY BOARD TONIGHT

Expected Vote Would Clear

OLD TRADITION AT STAKE

129 Years of Free Higher Education Would End—Colleges Could Reopen

By JUDITH CUMMINGS
New York City, which has offered a free college education to its citizens since 1847, is expected to bow to fiscal pressures and impose tuition in the City University by a vote of a reluctant Board of Higher Education.

Sources at the board said yesterday that a series of token conditions would be attached to the tuition resolution, so that the Legislature would have to share the onus of ending the 129-year-old tradition.

The expected vote would set the stage for the Legislature to approve a fiscal package that would permit reopening of City University, which was shut down on Friday, and would carry it through the next academic year.

Sources within the board said yesterday that approval "with qualifications"—which called for the state to increase its aid to the university—had been developed as a compromise that would allow reluctant board members as well as legislators in Albany to save face in their role of ending the free-tuition policy.

Fees of $750 to $800.
The policy dates to 1847, when City College, the first unit of what was to become the City University, was founded.

The imposition of tuition next fall at the same rates as those at the State University would mean annual charges of $750 for freshmen and sophomores and $900 for juniors and seniors for full-time undergraduates. The State University rates were suggested by Governor Carey as the basis of a long-term program of state financial aid.

The resolution the board is expected to adopt will approve the principle of tuition, but, according to sources, at the same time will call for assurances in the state rescue package, including the following:

• The release of $24 million to allow the university to reopen and finish the school year.

• The maintenance of an autonomous administrative structure for the city system.

• Provision for enough money.

17% of Nation Is Expected To Be Over 65 in Year 2030

WASHINGTON, May 31—If present birth trends continue, an estimated 17 percent of the population will be 65 or older by the year 2030, compared with 10.5 percent today, a new Census Bureau study shows.

The report, a major study of the above-65 population, also shows that as the country's elderly population grows and women continue to outlive men, there will be more educated, widowed, older women living alone in the country than ever before.

The report further shows that women continue to outlive men by an average of almost eight years, and that as of 1974, women could expect to live an average of 75.9 years and men an average of 68.2.

There now are 69 males for every 100 females 65 or older, whereas 40 years ago, the ratio was about even. By the year 2000, the figures show there will be about 65 males for every 100 females in the same age category.

"I view this as one of the most important demographic issues of our time," said Jacob S. Siegel, a senior statistician in the Census Bureau's population division.

City to Rebuild Part Of Hudson Parkway

By EDWARD C. BURNS
New York City has committed $3.5 million of its own funds to reconstruct a four-block dilapidated section of the Henry Hudson Parkway along Riverside Park at the 96th Street interchange.

Community Planning Board 7, covering the West Side from 59th to 110th Street, yesterday announced the city's commitment after months of negotiation.

The work, expected to start in August or September and to take 18 months, is the second of two major rebuilding projects to get the heavily traveled parkway back into shape.

Hope Rises for Vaccine Against Malaria

By WALTER SULLIVAN
Special to The New York Times
GENEVA, May 31—Rockefeller University has found a way to culture the most lethal form of malaria parasite, raising hopes at the World Health Organization here that the long-sought vaccine against that disease may become a reality.

Malaria is considered by W.H.O. specialists to be probably the most widespread of all parasitic diseases. In tropical Africa, where virtually the entire adult population becomes infected, an estimated million children under age 14 die of the disease each year.

Dr. William Trager of Rockefeller University made the discovery, which uses human blood as the growth medium. It is being likened to the discovery by John F. Enders of a way to culture polio viruses in monkey kidney tissue. This cleared the way for producing polio vaccine. More recently, it has been found that the organism causing leprosy can be cultured in armadillos.

The type of malaria parasite that has been grown in a laboratory blood preparation is Plasmodium falciparum, by far the most lethal of the four varieties. For those in affected areas who are not immune by reason of previous infection—mostly

Martha Mitchell, 57, Dies Of Bone-Marrow Cancer

By JOHN T. McQUISTON
Martha Mitchell, the out-spoken estranged wife of former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, died early yesterday at the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center. She was 57 years old.

Her physician, Dr. Klaus Mayer, attributed her death to multiple myeloma—a rare type of malignancy that attacks bone marrow—complicated by hemorrhage and terminal bronchial pneumonia.

Mrs. Mitchell had suffered from the malignancy since early 1975 or before and had been unconscious since her hospitalization Sunday following a cardiac arrest, according to Dr. Mayer, who is director of the blood bank and hematology laboratory of the cancer center.

None of Mrs. Mitchell's family was present at her death. Her son, C. Ray Jennings, who had been in close touch with her, was out of town and could not be reached yesterday, Dr. Mayer said. Mr. Mitchell had been apprised of her condition but did not come to the hospital because she was unconscious and because he might have been in the way in the intensive care unit, said Dr. Mayer, who added that Mr. Mitchell had been "very concerned."

Mrs. Mitchell, whose candid

But the Dorseys no longer feel that way. Their optimism is gone. They said they were disgusted with politics.

FORD IS PLANNING 7-NATION PARLEY

Economic Session in Summer Would Be a Follow-Up to
'75 Meeting in France

By DIANE HENRY
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, May 31—President Ford is planning an economic conference with six other nations this summer, a White House spokesman announced today.

The deputy White House press secretary, John Carlsoo, said arrangements for the meeting were still in the "exploratory" stage, with Canada and the five Governments that participated in the last such economic conference in Rambouillet, France, last November. They were France, Britain, Japan, West Germany and Italy.

Treasury Secretary William E. Simon said today in a telephone interview that the United States had been consulting with the other nations for the "past couple of months, on the desirability of a Rambouillet II." The time, place, agenda and participants have "not been finalized yet," Mr. Simon said, although some reports said that the meeting would be held in the Caribbean.

After the Primaries
The conference would be held after the primaries are over on June 8 and before the Republican National Convention begins on Aug. 16, Mr. Simon said.

There are no "major pressing problems" of international economics that need to be resolved, Mr. Simon said, but he

On Beirut's Streets, Quick Bursts Of Killing Shatter Even 'Good' Days

By HENRY TANNER
Special to The New York Times
BEIRUT, Lebanon, May 31—There is a rhythm to the cycle of violence in Lebanon. Some days are bad, some are relatively good. And there are bad moments even on the best of days.

On a good morning, the streets may be crowded. Then suddenly, for no apparent reason, pedestrians begin to hurry. Drivers start honking their horns and weaving in and out of traffic to get away. Within moments, the streets are empty.

The fruit vendors with their pushcarts are usually the last ones around—not by choice. Many of them are old men. Their carts are heavy and if they left them behind, their precious strawberries and cherries would be stolen even under a rain of shells.

Among politicians, the most accepted explanation for any sudden rise in violence is "the vile foreign hand."

Virtually everybody in Lebanon is convinced that the murder last week of Lida Atrash, the sister of Kamal Jumblatt, the leftist Druse leader, was the work of a foreign power and a delibate attempt to stop peace efforts here.

Mrs. Atrash was the first woman to become the victim of what looked like a political killing. In Lebanon, revenge killings are confined to men. "You kill my brother, I kill your son, but never your daughter," a Lebanese said.

A leftist he argued that even right-wing extremists, whom he hates most, could not have killed Mrs. Atrash. "They would have known that they would be sealing their own death," he said.

A Lone Soldier
"Only a government—a secret service of almost any country has the means to influence events here with a handful of men. A lone sniper at the right time and place can touch off countrywide violence. A man who infiltrated any one of the dozen private armies could do the same by pointing a mortar at the right target."

But the daily fluctuations of violence cannot be explained in this way.

Most often, in the experience of this reporter, the sudden outbursts have no detectable political or military purpose. They seem to start spontaneously—out of fear, anger, grief or perhaps most often confusion.

The other day, for instance, started very peacefully. On the Christian side of the crossing point at the museum, things looked so good that the streets were jammed with cars waiting to get across to the Moslem side. Some simply went for gasoline, which is more plentiful in west Beirut. At least one man was going to collect money from the Moslem caretaker who operates his small shop.

But traffic jams are not good for the nerves of excitable drivers who are waiting to cross into "enemy territory." The mood, somehow, was beginning to change.

Two large trucks carrying flour, which is plentiful on the Christian side but scarce in the Moslem area, stopped at the last well-protected barricade of the Phalangists, the principal right-wing Christian military force, then lumbered on.

One of the Phalangist soldiers shouted something at the drivers and gestured the trucks to move faster. As if time were running short. Two or three cars overtook the trucks and bumped across the danger point at Damascus Street, where the narrow no man's land is open to fire from both sides, and where the danger is increased by deep mortar craters that have been eroded by a constant jet of water from a broken main.

The cars were the last ones across that day. The trucks never made it. The driver of the first one was shot dead by a sniper. The other stopped.

Shocking Eruptions
Within moments there was pandemonium. Heavy shells fell on both sides. Cars screeched out of the area as fast as they could and there was firing of small arms on all sides. The streets were empty within moments.

Fighting continued at the crossing point for the rest of the day.

The next morning, another relatively good day, other cars—or perhaps some of the same—crossed again.

Who had fired the first shot? A Phalangist who did not like to see flour going to the other side, at least not on that day? A Moslem soldier who knew the trucks or the drivers and settled a personal score? A young man with a gun, on either side of the front line, who was overwrought because he had just heard news of a family member killed or maimed in another part of town?

Or, perhaps, a driver who had lost his nerve in the traffic jam and by firing his gun or just by driving madly had touched off a chain reaction?

No one tried to find out. There are no investigators of this kind of thing. And no one will ever know, although the toll connected with the incident must have been scores of dead and wounded, and, politically, a tangible setback for those who were trying to open a dialogue between the parties.

casualties Sunday and through last night was about 180 killed and 400 wounded—most of them in indiscriminate shelling.

The announcement by Damascus saying that Syria had intervened in Lebanon to bring fighting to an end in a specific area was the first of its kind.

Negotiations Described
According to the radio, the Syrian "delegates" drove into Lebanon, negotiated with the opposing local forces and brought about a meeting between them in a neighboring village.

The talks were attended by local Christian leaders and by Major Maamar. The meeting, in addition to declaring a cease-fire in the region, came out in favor of the Syrian "initiative," according to the radio. Syrian leaders had met in Damascus Sunday under the chairmanship of President Assad to decide on Syria's next move in Lebanon.

The New York Times/June 1, 1976

Taken together, the news of this strategy meeting, the announcement by the Damascus radio and the unconfirmed reports of Syrian reinforcements in Lebanon were considered here to be signs that Syria had again reached a crucial point in its intervention in Lebanon.

EGYPTIANS APPROVE LIQUOR RESTRICTION

Special to The New York Times

CAIRO, May 31—The General Assembly approved a bill yesterday prohibiting the sale of alcohol except in tourist areas.

As originally approved two weeks ago, the bill would have severely limited the number of places licensed to sell alcohol and completely forbidden the sale to Egyptians.

This caused an outcry among Western-oriented Egyptians, who complained that the ban on alcohol represented a step backward, away from the social and economic liberalization of recent years.

It also bothered others who said a dual system—one for foreigners, another for Egyptians—smacked of the privileges enjoyed by foreigners here before the 1952 revolution.

The revised bill was offered as a compromise and approved today. It will apparently have little effect except to close liquor stores in outlying areas, of which there are not many. An Egyptian, as well as a tourist, will still be able to go to the Hilton and order a drink, or to buy a bottle in certain licensed stores. The bill must be signed by President Anwar el-Sadat before it becomes law.

ong Process Seen in Revising Economic Order to Aid Poor Lands

By CLYDE H. FARNWORTH
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, May 31—Third-world countries want a new international economic order and industrial countries of the West agree that some changes in economic structures may be necessary. All agree that there is need for greater stability and more predictability and that the poor countries must help to help themselves.

That dialogue, formally begun in Paris last January, represents a negotiating phenomenon that most analysts believe will carry well into the final quarter of the 20th century. The Conference on Trade and Development, the Monetary Fund, the World Bank, the Paris Conference on International Economic Cooperation, the World Food Council, OPEC, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the Group of 77—these have supplied forums. Others will probably be created, with comparably confusing alphabet soup, or numerical designations. The Group of 77, which now includes 35 additional nations, is the body that plans the strategy for the third world. The O.E.C.D., whose membership consists of 24 industrial democracies of Western Europe, North America and developed Asia.

The major countries on both sides, meeting at the Paris economic conference since January, have accomplished relatively little except to determine some of the things they want to be about. UNCTAD, in Nairobi, and the OPEC oil ministers' meeting last week on the Indonesian island of Bali, have concentrated some of the issues.

Oil as the Major Lever
Those two meetings were linked because producers and nonproducers of oil in the third world have formed an alliance to back demands for creation of more wealth and fairer sharing. The Bali meeting, at which it was decided to continue OPEC's nine-month freeze on petroleum prices for the present, again spotlighted oil as the main bargaining instrument. Although third-world countries can cause some inconvenience with certain other commodities—bauxite and phosphates, whose prices have risen sharply—no other product has the uncomfortable far-reaching impact of oil on Western economic interests. Few other products are so concentrated in the third world.

Industrial nations have reacted by working out a program of emergency oil-sharing in their new International Energy Agency, by trying to promote compensatory financing and by spurring efforts to come up with alternative sources of energy to change the balance of forces in the market. The third world, recognizing that its solidarity might not always hold and that, over the long term, the West's strategy might work and Western dependence on oil might lessen, has been insisting on satisfaction now. Concessions Are Doubted

The developing countries' demands have been distilled over years of meetings of the Group of 77. The main elements now are commodity-price stabilization at high levels, a generalized debt moratorium, transfers of technology, more agricultural self-sufficiency, greater flows of aid to the poorest countries and more access to Western markets.

In the aftermath of the most serious post-World War II recessions, with unemployment still relatively high, and in election years for the United States, West Germany, Japan and Italy, and perhaps for Britain, the Western camp is politically unable to make major concessions, according to analysts. The complexity of the issues tem—if prices are kept too high, markets will be lost to synthetic substitutes. Divisions have emerged among the developing countries. Representatives of Brazil and Colombia said at Nairobi that they did not want to have coffee included under the common-fund umbrella, and Chilean doubts about copper were expressed.

Except for Sweden and the Netherlands, industrial countries oppose a debt moratorium. Some better-off developing countries such as Brazil and Mexico are equally unenthusiastic, worrying about the effects that a moratorium might have on their access to New York capital markets.

A Case-by-Case Proposal
But industrial countries are not against working out some set of principles to be applied in assessing the merits of each debtor country's case and agreeing that a country's overall development needs should be taken into account. Concerned about always being left in the position of hewers of wood and drawers of water for the industrial countries, developing countries have been pressing demands for more technology. Basically, they want to process their own raw materials, earn the higher profits on the finished goods and put their masses of unemployed to work. Industrial countries are sympathetic, but they argue that you cannot force technological transfers when technology is largely in the hands of private enterprise. The answer, they say, is to improve the investment climate. But developing countries have so far shown little enthusiasm for inviting in the multinational concerns.

Flow of Aid Up Sharply
Though industrial countries have fallen short of their aid goals—as projected in another forum, the Development Assistance Committee, which coordinates the aid policies of 17 Western countries—the total flows of money from the rich to the poor countries have risen sharply in recent years. Total disbursements from those 17 countries rose from $15.7 billion in 1970 to $27.6 billion last year. For the most part the gain reflected increased investments by multinational corporations and the proceeds of borrowing by the World Bank in private-capital markets. The bank puts the money into development projects.

From the United States last year, the total flows amounted to 1 percent of the gross national product, the combined value of all goods and services, but the concessional-aid portion represented only 0.26 percent. The Development Assistance Committee and the United Nations have adopted a goal of 0.70 percent.

As one sign of an improving climate, foreign-aid officials in Paris see a greater awareness in industrial countries of the need for helping the poorest or most seriously affected developing countries. They point to actions taken by Sweden and other Nordic countries to get their aid spending up above 0.70 percent. They point also to increased congressional support for aid programs in the United States and to action by Congress last year to divorce economic assistance from military assistance. "Development is now on everybody's mind" is an official in Paris said.

The ethnic variety among the Surinamers is evident from the faces of the customers and the merchants at the street markets near the port on the Surinam River, in Paramaribo.

Surinam, Fighting Economic Stagnation, Urges Emigrants to Come Back Home

Government officials candidly and gratefully refer to as a bribe.

But neither the entreaties of their homeland nor the promise of exorbitant aid has moved the Surinam emigrants, who by and large were the most skilled, educated and wealthy people of the country.

Like a self-fulfilling prophecy, their absence has largely created the economic stagnation that they most feared and continues to spread economic uncertainty in a country better endowed than most developing nations.

"Surinam's chances of significant economic development are among the best in the third world," asserted a foreign diplomat, pointing to the country's wealth in bauxite, timber and agricultural resources.

"This is not going to be one of those basket cases that are poolside with his Javanese wife," he said.

But in fact, the 320,000 Surinamers who stayed home already enjoy a per capita income that is exceeded by only four other countries in this part of the world—Argentina, Venezuela, Trinidad and Chile.

Even if a portion of the money promised by the Dutch is squandered, it still comes out to an outlay of approximately $5,000 per Surinamer—already one of the most generous examples of foreign aid on record.

There are former colonies like Algeria and Vietnam—that fought hard for their independence. There are others like Guyana that claim that their former rulers left them ill-prepared for independence. And then there are a few former colonies like Surinam.

"The Dutch dragged us kicking and screaming to independence. Many of us tried to postpone it."

Underlying these feelings were the fears that independence would bring an end to the economic security that existed under the Dutch.

Surinam is one of the most ethnically varied countries in the world. The Creoles, descendants of African slaves, and the Hindustanis, East Indians who came as indentured plantation workers, each account for about 35 percent of the population.

The remainder of the population includes Chinese, Europeans, Amerindians and a great many people—descendants of escaped slaves who live in the backlands much as their ancestors did in Africa.

Although the various ethnic groups have managed to maintain their cultures, religions and even languages, a great deal of intermarriage has taken place throughout the various social classes.

The New York Times/June 1, 1976

Many poorer Surinamers also joined the exodus because with Dutch citizenship they could count on the benefits of a developed welfare state. During the economic boom years of the 1960's and early '70's, the Netherlands welcomed Surinam laborers, because unlike other foreign workers they at least spoke Dutch. But during the recent recession years other foreign laborers were sent home while the Surinamers—enjoying full citizenship rights—remained, and came to be resented as welfare recipients or aliens occupying jobs that many Dutch thought should have gone to citizens born in the Netherlands.

The traditionally easy access to the summer country has given the Surinamers a peculiar sense of economic and social status.

Both professional and working-class Surinamers aspired first of all to well-paying jobs in the Netherlands, and, failing that, at least employment in Paramaribo. For decades now, there has been a heavy migration from the countryside to the capital. Today, numerous plantations and small farms along the fertile Atlantic coastal plains have been abandoned, and greater Paramaribo now has one-half of the country's population.

Despite an unemployment rate that hovers over 20 percent, summer duties have returned to the countryside because farm work is accorded low social status.

"People here say that if you start low, you stay low," said Leo Morpurgo, a local newspaper editor. "A farmer would prefer his son to even be a messenger boy than a farmer."

The country has remained solvent thanks to the bauxite and aluminum industry—Alcoa and Billiton, a Dutch firm, provide 90 percent of Surinam's export earnings.

But the rural exodus has been so heavy that the country faces the prospect of importing sugar, vegetable oils and peanuts—products that used to be exported to recent years.

The Government became alarmed enough to send out Prime Minister Arron and his Cabinet to take part personally in the sugar cane harvest last March in an attempt to prove "there is no shame in manual labor."

The Government has mapped out an ambitious agrarian program and a project to develop the timber and bauxite deposits in sparsely settled western Surinam. But even with the billion-dollar aid packages, a way will have to be found to draw skilled laborers and professionals from the Netherlands and thousands of other workers from Paramaribo.

"If we can't convince them to move into the western wilderness," conceded a development official, "we might as well sit back and distribute all that aid money as welfare payments."

Argentine Military Is Silent On Kidnapping of Official

BUENOS AIRES, May 31 (UPI)—Except for a terse statement announcing the kidnapping, there was no official word today on the abduction by leftist guerrillas of Col. Juan A. Pita, the government-appointed administrator of the General Labor Confederation.

An official army communiqué said Colonel Pita was kidnapped yesterday "subversive delinquents" near the port city of La Plata, 35 miles southeast of Buenos Aires.

Security sources said guerrillas intercepted his car as he was on the way home after visiting relatives.

Four Light Tremors Shake Area in Northeastern Italy

UDINE, Italy, May 31 (UPI)—Four light earth tremors shook northeast Italy last night and today, seismological experts said, but no damage or injuries were reported.

Geophysical Observatory officials said three shocks were recorded this morning, the strongest registered 3 on the Richter scale, they said.

Last night, the observatory officials said, a stronger tremor measuring 3.6 was felt by refugees living in tents. The refugees' homes were destroyed in the May 6 earthquake that devastated the region.

Britain and Iceland Begin Fishery Negotiations

OSLO, May 31 (AP)—Talks expected to end the dispute between Britain and Iceland over fishing rights opened today in this Norwegian capital.

Delegations Meet in Oslo, Exchange Proposals and Adourn to Study Them

A nine-member British delegation headed by Foreign Secretary Anthony Crosland and a seven-man Icelandic group led by Foreign Minister Einar Augustsson met at the Norwegian Government's guest house, exchanged proposals and adjourned to study the documents.

1974, British ships took 150,000 tons. Norwegian sources said Britain and Iceland had agreed in principle to a six-month truce while they worked out the final agreement. The temporary pact would permit 24 British trawlers to fish within 200 miles of Iceland in certain areas.

Iceland's fishermen, who preserve the stocks of its economy, Britain to recognize the limit thousands of fishing jobs were at stake. British trawlers violate even the old 50-mile limit, prompting Iceland's navy vessels to cut it. Britain replied by sending frigates to protect its men. Dozens of collisions and shooting incidents have been killed.

MOSCOW PLEDGES ANGOLA ARMS AID

Economic Assistance Is Also Promised Following Visit by the Prime Minister

By CHRISTOPHER S. WREN
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, May 31 — The Soviet Union has agreed to provide Angola with further military aid in the wake of the support it gave to the Luanda authorities during the civil war last winter.

A joint communiqué issued tonight on the basis of talks reported that "an understanding was reached on certain measures aimed at giving Angola assistance in consolidating its defensive capacity."

Details were given on whether this aid would involve advanced weapons or rely on replacements for arms provided during the earlier conflict.

The announcement was made as Prime Minister Lopo Nascimento wound up a six-long visit to the Soviet Union that was clearly aimed at strengthening ties between the two countries. The Soviet Union also pledged to help Angola develop its economy, educational system and public health.

The U.S.S.R. believes it is its duty of all freedom-loving peoples to give support and assistance to Angola, the communiqué said.

Investment in Black Africa Moscow's commitment to Luanda appeared to be part of a growing Soviet investment in southern black Africa that is going substantially beyond the military support rendered over a decade to the Soviet-backed liberation movements in Africa's former Portuguese colonies.

Less than two weeks ago Soviet Union agreed to help the new government in Mozambique "in strengthening its defense potential." This was arranged during a visit here by Amora Machel, head of Frelimo, the successful nationalist government in Mozambique.

Though official details of other visits have been sketchy, they were considered significant enough that both Mr. Machel and Mr. Nascimento were received by the Soviet party chief, Leonid I. Brezhnev. Soviet economic and military specialists also participated in both sets of negotiations.

It was not known whether the new commitments meant that Soviet arms might be given to Angola and Mozambique to be passed on for the guerrilla struggles against Rhodesia and South Africa. The Soviet Union has been cautious to avoid appearing involved in these efforts, but it has made its sympathies clear enough.

The communiqué declared that the liberation struggles in these countries were "lawful" and it urged "all progressive forces of the world to step up support for their just cause."

Seeker to Avoid Backlash The Soviet Union has been careful not to prompt the kind of backlash that it got from the United States when Soviet arms and Cuban troops were sent to the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola to help its defeat its two rival independence movements.

Two days ago, a prominent Soviet commentator, Yuri A. Zhukov, told Soviet television viewers that "the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola has already begun," but he added no firm details to the first disclosure of the withdrawal here. At the same time, the Soviet press has become slightly more candid about the assistance given in Angola by both Cuba and the Soviet Union without revealing actual figures.

The communiqué said the two countries would continue to develop "all-round cooperation." During the visit, the Soviet Union and Angola signed trade, cultural and scientific cooperation agreements, a consular convention, and various protocols on setting up trade missions and cooperating in fisheries. The Soviet Union stressed that it backed Angola's request for membership in the United Nations.

The negotiations were described as taking place in a spirit of "cordiality and full mutual understanding." Following two days of formal talks in Moscow, the Angolan Prime Minister visited Leningrad and Alma-Ata before flying home today.

18 Soldiers Reported Slain In May in Rhodesian War

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, May 31 (UPI) — Rhodesia's accelerated month-old anti-guerrilla offensive has claimed the lives of 18 Rhodesian soldiers, four more than in all of 1975, according to official figures released today.

The Mozambique-based guerrillas lost 104 men, compared with a death toll of 140 in 1975.

The figures, released by the security forces headquarters, showed that May was the bloodiest month since fighting began in December 1972.

Since then 113 Rhodesians have died in border clashes with guerrillas, who have lost 893 men. About 400 black civilians have been killed in that time.

The offensive was launched to take advantage of Rhodesia's winter bush conditions which favor counter-insurgency operations, according to Gen. Peter Walls, chief of the army.

FRENCH ASSAILING ATOM PLANT SALE

Reports That South Africa Could Make a Bomb Are Rejected as Nonsense

Special to The New York Times
 PARIS, May 31—A controversy has arisen here over the announcement that South Africa is to obtain a nuclear power plant from France.

Protests in the press and elsewhere that South Africa was in effect acquiring the means to develop its own atomic bomb were dismissed by the French Government today as nonsense. The Foreign Ministry issued a number of "guarantees" against such a development, including a pledge from the South African Government that would not use two reactors, to be set up 20 miles north of Cape Town, for any military projects.

Commenting on the announcement from Cape Town Saturday that the French consortium of Framatome, Alcatel and Spie Batignolles had won a power-plant contract worth nearly $1 billion, the conservative newspaper Figaro reported what the reaction might be from the black African minorities that had so far been hostile to France.

The Plutonium Potential
 The papers said the two reactors could produce enough plutonium annually to make several hundred atomic bombs the size that was dropped on Nagasaki in 1945.

In a front-page editorial, Le Monde noted that President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, in his election campaign two years ago, pledged a "liberal" foreign policy and that on several occasions he had stated that France, while not a signer of a treaty on nonproliferation of nuclear arms, would behave as if it had signed it.

The Federation of Protestant Churches of France issued a statement protesting "against support given a regime based on racial discrimination and contempt of the clearest United Nations recommendations."

Others who commented related that the French President, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, speaking in Kinshasa, Zaire, on Aug. 1, announced a widening embargo on arms sales to South Africa except those involving contracts already signed. It was reported here that negotiations for the contract closed Saturday had been conducted over three years.

'Strict Controls' Policy
 Foreign Minister Jean Sauvagnargues has said that "France imposes strict controls" on its sales of nuclear technology to make sure that that technology is used only for peaceful purposes. Paris has made such sales to Iran and Pakistan, here are contradictory reports whether similar sales are being negotiated with Libya and Iraq.

A deal with South Korea was canceled on orders from Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, but according to reports circulating here, it was the Koreans who called off as a result of pressure from the United States.

A Foreign Ministry official, asked about controls and guarantees, said that in each case France and the buyer country signed an accord stipulating that the buyer would not use the processed material for explosions, transfer the technology to military projects or use the technology on to a third country.

The official added that there is always an agreement signed between Paris, the buyer country and the International Atomic Energy Commission, bestowing on the Vienna-based agency a right of inspection.

Behind much of the concern voiced here over the South African deal was a statement made three weeks ago by Prime Minister Jean B. Vorster that South Africa had the technology to produce atomic bombs. The two plans, to be determined in November 1982 and November 1983 are to have a capacity of 925 megawatts each. They require enriched uranium as fuel.

South Africa is a leading exporter of uranium, and the South African Government reportedly hopes that the enrichment will be done by the United States. The material would need reprocessing to obtain the plutonium required for atomic bombs. The report states that South Africa had experimental reprocessing plants.

Bastogne Opens Museum Honoring '44 G.I. Heroes

By PAUL KEMEZIS

Special to The New York Times

BASTOGNE, Belgium, May 31 — With military bands, marching children and a unit of American soldiers in Bicentennial garb, Bastogne today inaugurated a museum dedicated to the heroic American defense of the town during the Battle of the Bulge.

The busy commercial center in the rolling Ardennes hills of southern Belgium today bears no physical scars from the two weeks of intense fighting in December 1944 that was considered one of the toughest battles of World War II.

But the battle left a vivid imprint on the minds of the people, and also a lasting friendship with America that was clear during today's ceremonies.

"It was terrible, very hard," said Albert Schmitz, 80 years old, as he watched the parade in front of the large star-shaped American monument built shortly after the war on a hill outside the town. "But even with the hardship I would go through it all again just for the sight of the American paratroopers dropping into here."

German Surprise Attack
The paratroopers of the 101st Airborne Division dropped into Bastogne just before Christmas 1944, to shore up the defense of the key crossroads town organized by scattered United States units retreating before a powerful German surprise attack. Led by Brig. Gen. Anthony C. McAuliffe, who became famous for answering "Nuts" to a German surrender demand, they held out for 10 days until a force under Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton Jr. pushing up from Luxembourg broke the siege.

General McAuliffe, who died last year, and the German commander, General Hasso von Manteuffel, aided in setting up the new museum, a low star-shaped structure, faced in the native gray slate of the region, which stands close to the American monument.

The museum was first planned eight years ago, but the town of 7,000 had difficulty finding financing. Finally the Belgian National Tourist Council agreed to put up 80 per cent of the $1 million cost and the town scraped together the rest.

The collection of weapons, uniforms and vehicles inside the museum, valued at $250,000, belongs to Guy Arends, a tall, well-dressed man who is almost as much a legend around Bastogne as the battle.

As a young university student after the war, Mr. Arends, a native of the town, got the idea to set up a museum for the visitors who were beginning to come to Bastogne. Gathering old equipment and photos, he set up the "Nuts Museum" in a small house off the Main Square, which had been renamed "McAuliffe Place."

The museum, which is still in existence, was a success and got Mr. Arends involved in the advertising business. With the earnings from his advertising office he has continued to buy World War II equipment and now has one of the biggest collections of its kind in Europe.

At today's ceremony there was much talk of a new wave of tourists that the town hopes the museum will attract to stimulate the sluggish economy of the region.

At present 200,000 visitors a year come to the town to view the rolling countryside where the battle took place. About 40,000 of them are Americans. Many Americans who fought at Bastogne have maintained links with residents and there are major reunions here each year.

dheim Cites Growing Poverty at Habitat Parley

114 The New York Times
OVER, Canada, May 31—A United Nations conference on the problems of the world's communities, Secretary Kurt Waldheim called for "urgent remedial action" and "better forms of social organization."

cumulation of problems among human settlements was not due primarily to the explosive growth of world population, but to a lack of national and international planning that called for "urgent remedial action" and "better forms of social organization."

Both Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization are among the participants — the P.L.O. as a nonvoting "observer" group.

ely controlled all accesses to the scene. However, the only demonstration was some subdued drum-beating and war-chanting by a dozen Indians demanding "political asylum" for Leonard Peltier, a 32-year-old South Dakota Sioux charged with murdering two Federal Bureau of Investigation men last year in an aftermath of the Wounded Knee disorders. He is facing extradition hearings here.

OTTAWA HIGH COURT STUDIES WAGE CURB

Special to The New York Times
OTTAWA, May 31—Before an overflow crowd of spectators, the Supreme Court of Canada opened hearings today on a challenge to the legality of the Government's controversial wage and price controls. The case is considered one of the most important constitutional issues to come before the tribunal in many years.

ment in the case are organized labor and Alberta Province, with several other provinces in an equivocal position.

In question are the conditions under which the Federal Government may bypass the normal legislative processes, as was done in imposing the controls last October, and how far a province may go in relinquishing powers to Ottawa.

the ground that inflationary conditions at the time constituted a threat to "peace, order and good government."

Such an emergency is the only justification for such summary action allowed by the British North America Act of 1867, which serves as the Constitution of Canada. The provision was last invoked in 1970 during a time of civil unrest in Quebec.

The Associated Press Is Developing Broader Perception of What Is News

By DEIRDRE CARMODY

The computers and dazzling high-speed printers of The Associated Press relentlessly spill out something like three million words a day. Within hours, news from these dispatches appears in up to 1,300 newspapers and is read over 3,500 radio and television stations throughout the country. At the same time, the news is rewritten, re-edited and transmitted to millions more people in 100 foreign countries.

The A.P. is a global giant whose reach wraps around the world and whose muscle is so vast that it cannot be measured. But it is a strangely anonymous giant and the millions of readers and viewers who unknowingly rely on it for most of their news about the nation and the world would be hard pressed to detail very much about it.

The A.P. is now undergoing its first significant change in leadership in 14 years, as Wes Gallagher, general manager since 1962, steps down to be replaced by his 53-year-old deputy, Keith Fuller. Although Mr. Fuller has no effect taken over the reins in the last few weeks, Mr. Gallagher will stay on supervising political coverage until he reaches the mandatory retirement age of 65 in October.

Reflecting Societal Shift
The real change in the A.P., however, is not the change in leadership. Mr. Fuller says that he is not contemplating any dramatic initiatives—but a shift in A.P.'s perception of what is news, which has been evolving over the last decade. It is a shift that journalists say reflects a shift in society itself.

While the A.P. continues to cover news events as they happen, there is a new emphasis on stories that try to get behind the visible facts of the news. The A.P. now sends out longer and more detailed—"in-depth"—stories on life styles, inflation, coconsumerism and the environment.

For instance, a recent five-part series detailed the growth of Federal regulatory agencies as well as their cost and effectiveness. One part described a day with one typical American family and reported in minute detail how decisions made by regulatory agencies affected that family's everyday life. These examples ranged from the artificial sweeteners in the morning coffee, regulated by the Food and Drug Administration, to the commercials watched by the children at bedtime, which would be regulated by proposed Federal Trade Commission regulations.

Much of this came about because of the energy crisis, according to Wes Gallagher.

"We found that it was not enough to just expose these things day after day," Mr. Gallagher said. "The man in the street has become more cynical and what he wanted was more interpretive reporting. He wanted to know what to do about these problems. He needed them in a cooler perspective."

To Study Urban Problems

The A.P. created a special group of energy specialists who wrote background and interpretive stories about the oil shortage.

Another group of reporters, dubbed the "Med Squad," was formed to roam around doing stories on the life styles of 18- to 35-year-olds. An investigative team was formed in Washington with 10 to 12 reporters on it to look behind the news, although that effort has somewhat dwindled and the group is down to about four members.

This summer a team of reporters will attend a special seminar at Northwestern University to study urban problems. A bibliography of some 200 books will be compiled as reference material for reporters covering cities. The reporters at the seminar may even draw up a checklist—a 20-point warning system, Mr. Gallagher calls it—for reporters in other cities indicating what signs should be watched for in the early stages of urban decline.

"We should have done this four or five years ago," Mr. Gallagher said in an interview. "I think that for the next 10 years this urban problem will be our biggest continuing news story. If we can get some basic answers out of this seminar, then we'll put it all in the computer file and we will be able to pursue it in every city in the country."

Foreign Coverage Changes

This basic approach to reporting is being applied to all areas. Television has affected the news, but in one way it has whetted the viewer's appetite for what TV does not give him. In sports for instance, he probably already knows the score of the football game when he reads the A.P. story the next morning in his newspaper, but he wants to know more about what he has glimpsed—more about why a certain play had been deemed necessary, for example.

"Newspapers were so convinced that TV would dry up the sports pages, but television really added rather than diminished," Mr. Fuller says. While the A.P. continues to cover spot foreign news, is also less emphasis on day-by-day developments.

"Following Vietnam, readers turned off," Mr. Fuller says. "They were sick of foreign news. They didn't want to know each of the 30 times the Italians formed a new government. If the papers used it, we were certain that it was a big yawn to the reader. It was considered dull foreign coverage that no one could relate to."

Since the A.P. is a cooperative and owned by its members, it is also theirs to criticize freely or to use as they wish. As a result, the A.P. says it averages 3,486 queries a week from its members, ranging from questions as to what is the date of the next primary to the fact that the figures of the fourth paragraph of a given story don't add up. More importantly, these comments also include story suggestions and requests that the A.P. cover a specific event.

The member newspapers also form an organization called the Associated Press Managing Editors Association whose purpose is to keep the service up to snuff. Its committees are constantly scrutinizing A.P. to see how it can be improved. For instance, suggestions in the most recently published A.P.M.E. report include: more interpretation of foreign news; more personal sketches and stories about people in foreign countries; more economic angles in foreign coverage; more stories about the changes brought about by the women's movement; more stories about Canada and Mexico.

Speed is of course still a top priority when necessary. The

A.P. prides itself that its reporters will be the first at the scene of the disaster or the first to get the news out on the wire after the Presidential news conference. But gone are the days of the old wire-service reporter, that cocked on head, cigarette dangling from lip, knocking down the opposition in the rush to the telephone and shouting, "Hello, sweetheart, get me re-writer!"

Today, he may well even be carrying his own portable computer and filing his story directly into it. It is part of a technological revolution that has eliminated one of the major problems of wire services in the old days—the backlog of news that simply couldn't be transmitted fast enough at the old teletype speed of 66 words a minute. Now the high-speed printers send out copy at 1,200 words a minute. And within the next few weeks, the A.P. will begin sending out stock tables at a staggering rate of 12,000 words a minute.

The A.P. is also making greater use of computers. As an aid to covering the primaries, the statements of candidates on a number of subjects have been computerized so that when the candidate arrives in a certain city, the A.P. bureau chief there will be able to get a computer print-out briefing him on the candidate's views, statements and contradictions. Reporters at the A.P. point that this is a useful tool but does not take the place of having a reporter stick with a candidate throughout his campaign.

Every summer, The Fresh Air Fund sends over 17,000 underprivileged kids out of the city and into the country.

It gives kids open fields to play in, instead of fenced-in playgrounds and city streets.

It gives kids lakes and ponds, instead of open fire hydrants.

And perhaps, most importantly, it gives ghetto kids something they desperately need. A place where they can be children.

infants and young children—the fatality rate is high.

The disease has virtually been eradicated in Europe, Australia, the United States and most Caribbean islands. This was done by heavy use of insecticides to destroy the anopheles mosquitoes, which carry the disease from person to person, and giving preventive drugs to people exposed to infection.

Elsewhere, however, the disease is rampant. In India, Pakistan and Sri Lanka, it has been spreading. Drugs and insecticides that formerly were effective in some regions are no longer so, presumably because the parasites and mosquitoes have evolved a defense against them. According to W.H.O. specialists, a recent all-out effort in northern Nigeria with drugs and insecticides was unsuccessful.

It is believed that the disease is so enriched in the human and insect populations of those regions that such strategies are useless. The primary hope is therefore focused on vaccines.

In its complex life cycle, the malaria parasite, a form of protozoan, passes through a succession of stages, and it is for one of these stages that Dr. Trager's method is effective. The form inoculated into the victim in mosquito saliva is a spore or sporozoite. This enters the liver and later emerges in a form that enters the red blood cells, proliferating there.

Amenable to Culture

The red cells then burst, spewing forth the parasites in the merozoite form, which enters other red cells to proliferate further. It is the free-moving merozoite stage that has been found amenable to culture in human blood.

A vaccine has been produced in minuscule quantities based on inactivation of the sporozoite stage by exposing malaria-bearing mosquitoes to radiation. The mosquitoes, which survive the radiation, are allowed to bite volunteers, injecting the disabled sporozoites which, while unable to multiply, stimulate the host's defense to develop immunity.

The volunteers were then bitten hundreds or thousands of times by fully infective mosquitoes, according to W.H.O. scientists, yet never became infected. The work was initiated by Dr. Ruth Muessegger at New York University, they said, and then applied to human tests at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

Another type of vaccine, used only on monkeys, has been tested by Dr. Sydney Cohen of Guya Hospital Medical School in London after an effort of four or five years. According to the W.H.O. specialists, he has been able to culture merozoites in the blood of rhesus monkeys long enough for them to infect red cells and split them open.

He was able to extract merozoites, kill them, add an adjuvant and then inject them into monkeys. The role of the adjuvant—in this case a mixture of oil and killed tuberculosis bacteria—was to stimulate the immune system of the recipient. Normally, the malaria strain "used" as fatal to such monkeys, but they were immunized by this method.

Uncertainties Remain

The drawback of this approach is that the adjuvant—seemingly an essential component—would be unsafe for human injection. The sporozoite approach also seems impractical to immunologists because mosquitoes would be required to mass-produce the vaccine. It is for this reason they consider the human blood discovery a hopeful sign.

They warned today, however, that major hurdles and uncertainties remained. In the monkey experiments, for example, these seemed to be sufficient variations in the chemistry of the parasites so that immunity against one form was not as strong as it was against another. Such antigenic variation might prove more marked in human forms of malaria, they said.

This may be clarified by Dr. Cohen's current work, they added, in which notes monkeys are being infected with human (Maloparum) strains.

Another problem is the chronic nature of malaria. Whereas survivors of polio are immune for life, those who have had malaria apparently continue protected only if their immune systems are periodically "challenged by reinfection," Dr. A. C. Lucas, the Harvard-trained Nigerian who will head the new W.H.O. program on tropical diseases, has been free to mass-produce the vaccine.

His colleagues, however, fear that on his return to Nigeria, after a prolonged absence, he will be hard hit by the disease, as have others of his countrymen. The immunological team that he heads includes Dr. Edmund W. T. DeMaessene of the Netherlands and Dr. David Rowe of Britain.

Because of the nature of natural malarial immunity, it is not clear, Dr. Rowe said, whether a vaccine would merely suppress the disease or whether it would destroy the parasite. In the latter case, it might serve as a tool for eradication.

Early next year, the group here is to meet in the United States with representatives of the Agency for International Development to discuss strategies for developing the most practical way to culture the malaria parasite.

Dr. Trager's method is expected to be a focal point of the discussion. A detailed account of the process is regularly published in the journal Science.

Malaria is of major concern to A.L.D. and other such agencies, because the physical and mental handicaps it imposes, as a major obstacle to economic development in such areas as Africa and India. In tropical countries, W.H.O. estimates that 18 percent of hospital patients are malarial victims.

Yet, as stated in a recent W.H.O. assessment, except in urban areas, classical anti-malarial strategies in that area are at present not economically or technically feasible.

Pan Am. The all-747 airline across the North Atlantic and the Pacific.

That fact should make things easy for you. Not only in choosing your airline, but in putting your trip together. And enjoying it.

To Europe this summer, we'll be the only U.S. airline flying only big, comfortable 747s across the North Atlantic.

If you're going to be crossing the wide Pacific, we'll have nothing but comfort for you there, too. Every flight will be a 747.

When we go to Tokyo from Los Angeles and New York, we use our new 747 SP. Which gives us (and you) the only non-stops to Japan from those cities. Which also, naturally, results in the fastest flights to Tokyo from those cities.

At Pan Am, you don't pay a penny extra for having the world's largest fleet of scheduled 747s at your beck and call.

And speaking of calling, why not call your travel agent.

He'll give you our schedules and work out your trip with you. And most likely that won't cost you a penny extra either.

Birch Society Members Tied to Smuggling of Illegal Drug

By EVERETT R. HOLLES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES

SAN DIEGO, May 31—Leaders of an alleged international smuggling conspiracy say that members of the John Birch Society have been prominent in "spearheading" the promotion and distribution of the illegal drug Laetrile to American cancer sufferers and their doctors.

In interviews the alleged conspirators identified as members of the right-wing organization of the eight Americans indicted last week by a Federal grand jury here for smuggling the contraband drug into this country from Mexico and selling it at huge markups. They indicated that there were probably other society members among the other four suspects.

Group Formed in 1972

Several of those indicted said in interviews over the weekend that many other persons dealing in the drug had been recruited from the society founded by Robert Welch in 1958. These persons were said to be distributors or among the nearly 1,000 physicians allegedly administering it to cancer patients.

Robert W. Bradford, 45 years old, who is one of the persons indicted and a life member of the Birch Society, said that the involvement of society members with the drug occurred "because our belief in basic constitutional rights and free-Mexico; seven Mexicans associated with the operation, and a British entrepreneur accused of directing the multimillion-dollar smuggling conspiracy.

Reports that $130,000 of Mafia money was funneled into the Laetrile operation at one customs agents last Dec. 20 and charged with having 3,900 vials worth $40,000 of Laetrile in his car. He is a co-founder and president of the Committee for Freedom of Choice in Cancer Therapy set up around a nucleus of John Birch members in 1972 in Los Altos, Calif. The committee says it has 28,000 members in 415 nationwide charters.

The John Birch Society's district governor for 13 Western states, Charles Armour of San Antonio, Calif., said that John Birch publications such as American Opinion and Review of the News had pressed for the legalization of Laetrile and had denounced the Food and Drug Administration's efforts to suppress it. Laetrile, pronounced LAY-a-trill, is produced from an extract of apricot pits and is rich in cyanide.

Mr. Armour said that while many of the society's members may be involved in the Laetrile traffic their activities were wholly without sanction of the society.

"The society itself is in no way involved in smuggling or distributing Laetrile," he said. "Although we have publicly defended the basic right of doctors to treat patients according to their professional judgment, including the use of Laetrile, we have neither encouraged our members to use or not to use the drug."

19 Named in Indictment

The Federal indictment announced last week named 19 defendants. They included two Laetrile-producing plants and a distribution concern in Tijuana, Mexico; seven Mexicans associated with the operation, and a British entrepreneur accused of directing the multimillion-dollar smuggling conspiracy.

Reports that $130,000 of Mafia money was funneled into the Laetrile operation at one customs agents last Dec. 20 and charged with having 3,900 vials worth $40,000 of Laetrile in his car. He is a co-founder and president of the Committee for Freedom of Choice in Cancer Therapy set up around a nucleus of John Birch members in 1972 in Los Altos, Calif. The committee says it has 28,000 members in 415 nationwide charters.

His McNaughton foundation for "Laetrile research," to which he said the Mafia money had been given, operated first in Montreal, then in Sausalito, Calif., until 1971, when the California authorities cracked down on clandestine Laetrile laboratories. He then shifted his activities to Tijuana.

Laetrile is also known by its pharmaceutical name, Amygdalin, and as Vitamin B-17 and Nitroside, as well as a variety of trade names including Kamadin, Cyto H-3 and KH-3. Its importation and interstate shipment and sale have been prohibited since 1963, by the F.D.A., which has called Laetrile a "crude hoax" and a worthless nostrum having no demonstrated value in alleviating cancer.

The drug is also illegal in Canada but it can be manufactured legally and used in cancer therapy in 24 countries.

Its defenders generally prefer to call it Vitamin B-17 to dissociate it from classification as a drug. They contended that the F.D.A. is acting illegally in banning what is actually a megavitamin whole-body food supplement. They say that the supplement is not sold as a "cancer cure" but that it has proved effective in holding the spread of malignancies, relieving pain and prolonging life.

Books Endorsing Drug

Books and articles defending Laetrile's effectiveness are prominently displayed for sale by the Birch Society's bookshops around the country.

Reprints of pro-Laetrile articles by such John Birch writers as Alan Stang, Gary Allen, Dan Smoot and others are widely distributed by national organizations such as the Committee for Freedom of Choice. These organizations either openly supply the drug or direct members to doctors, clinics or distributors where it is available.

An Assistant United States Attorney, Herbert B. Hoffman, who directed the grand jury investigation, agreed with Mr. Armour that although John Birch members were highly active in the illegal traffic no evidence had been brought to light of any involvement by the society itself.

Joseph S. Bowman, 48, of El Cerrito, Calif., business manager for Dr. Richardson and an accused smuggler. The four other indicted Americans are Guido Orlandi Sr. of Burlington, Vt.; Frank J. Spolnik of Hammond, Ind.; and Donald Eugene Hanson and Donna Grace Schuster, both of Rochester, Minn. None were available for comment.

Among the officers of the Committee for Freedom of Choice, as listed in Choice, the committee publication, all are John Birch members with one exception, according to Michael L. Culbert, the editor of Choice and himself a John Birch member. The exception was said to be Dr. Ernst T. Krebs Jr., of San Francisco, who holds the basic patent on Laetrile and is the committee's scientific director.

Others Linked to Birch

Mr. Culbert said that the Birch officials of the committee, in addition to Mr. Bradford, Mr. Salaman and himself, were George Kell of Modesto, Calif., chief legal counsel; Representative Larry P. McDonald, Democrat of Georgia who is a member of the John Birch National Council and the committee's legislative adviser; and Maureen Salaman, associate editor of Choice and wife of Frank Salaman, the defendant. Representative McDonald openly discussed his use of Laetrile in his practice as a urologist in Marietta, Ga.

Among the unindicted co-conspirators were said to be Dr. Seymour Weisman, operator of the Sunny Slope Clinic in Phoenix, Ariz., and his wife, Geraldine. Federal agents said that Mrs. Weisman was arrested at the Tecate border crossing near here last October with $4,000 worth of Laetrile and that she was carrying a John Birch membership card. The charges are still pending.

Mr. Culbert, a former editor of the Berkeley Daily Gazette and author of the book "Vitamin B-17, Forbidden Weapon Against Cancer," said, "There are a lot of us Birchers in the Laetrile movement because the John Birch Society has the guts to fight for what it believes in."

Mr. Bradford insists that he and his associates have never smuggled Laetrile although he concedes they have handled great amounts of it. He said, "Government indictments will in no way curtail our activities and we will continue helping cancer sufferers to get to the right doctors and make sure that the doctors have adequate supplies of B-17, which is a natural food, agent against which there is no Federal law."

The California Department of Health, in a report to the State Legislature on March 27, stated that the international smuggling of Laetrile was directed by "an ultraconservative organization" which it did not identify but which a department official said "could reasonably be inferred to be the John Birch Society."

Earlier, on June 14, 1974, the Federal Food and Drug Administration's Division of Federal-State Relations issued a memorandum stating: "There appears to be a close relationship between the organization [the Los Altos Committee for Freedom of Choice] and the John Birch Society."

HOW TO SIGN UP FOR FREE CHECKING IF YOU'RE A CITIBANK CUSTOMER.

If you have the kind of checking where you pay for every check. Simply go to your nearest Citibank branch and ask for free checking. Then we can help you choose where to keep your $500 average balance. In your savings or your checking account. If you don't have a Citibank savings account, you may want to open one.

If you have the kind of checking where your balance determines your charge. Because you're keeping an average minimum balance in your checking account, you're not paying for every check. You can now keep that average balance in a savings account and still get free checking. So, if you don't have a savings account at Citibank, you may want to open one.

If you have a Citibank Combo Plan. You don't do anything. Your monthly checking fee will be eliminated as of the statement you receive in June.

If you only have a Citibank savings account. And, if your balance averages $500, then you have an excellent reason to switch your checking to Citibank and get free checking.

HOW TO GET FREE CHECKING IF YOU'RE A CUSTOMER OF ANOTHER BANK.

Chances are, you're not getting all this at your present bank, so you're probably wondering how you can get our free checking. Simply stop in at the Citibank branch nearest you and ask for free checking. We'll take care of the rest. It's that easy.

ly, 300,000 to 400,000 a year.
The elderly population, which stood at 12.4 million in 1950, rose to 22.4 million in 1975. By the year 2000, it is expected to increase to about 31 million, more than one-third larger than now.

In 1975, New York and California had the greatest number of persons more than 65 with nearly two million each. They are followed by Pennsylvania, Florida, Illinois, Texas and Ohio, each of which has more than one million persons more than 65.

The report also shows that death rates vary inversely with educational level, income and occupational level. "The chan-better educated and more highly placed person," the report says.

PRISON PROGRAM CALLED A FAILURE

Head of Connecticut System Says Inmate Rehabilitation is Largely a Lost Cause

By LAWRENCE FELLOWS
Special to The New York Times

HARTFORD—After six years at the head of one of the more advanced and innovative prison systems in the country, John R. Manson, Connecticut's Commissioner of Correction, has gradually and reluctantly come to the conclusion that the cause for rehabilitating prisoners is largely a lost one.

With few exceptions, the Commissioner now contends, the rehabilitative approach to imprisonment, the whole framework of indeterminate sentencing, education and job training in prison and, finally, parole have provided a structure on which prisoners outwit the people who imprison them and gain an easier time in prison and earlier release than society expects.

"What we've got here is a facade of public protection," Mr. Manson said in an interview.

Mr. Manson, who is 48 years old, served in the Federal probationary service in Connecticut for eight years. He was an associate professor of psychology at Quinnipiac College in Hamden, Conn., and a psychological consultant in the public school system.

The Commissioner still has faith in the programs for drug addicts in the prisons and he still supports an experimental "moral development" community for inmates.

But experience shows, Mr. Manson said, that as long as a man does not know how long he must stay in prison, he will most likely sign up for whatever program he thinks will impress the parole board most, and will be almost as likely after his release to get into trouble with the law and wind up again in prison.

"With only a few exceptions, there's no relationship to recidivism, no matter what the program," the Commissioner said. "I know I'm in the minority among my colleagues around the country, but I just don't think they're facing the empirical realities. It does give you some cause for concern."

2 Programs Cited

Among the exceptions, Mr. Manson said, are the prison drug program and what is known as the "just community" project, which seeks to make responsible persons of selected young inmates by introducing them in stages to certain fixed civil liberties, freedom of movement, property rights and rights of assembly and political expression — none of which would normally exist in a prison.

These programs and others in the Connecticut prison system, including the placing of men and women together in classrooms and in other specific, controlled situations to improve prisoners' behavior and social attitudes have been widely studied by other states and, in some instances, copied.

But in Connecticut, after a continuing reassessment of programs, some are being curtailed.

Prisoners in Connecticut are no longer allowed out in the daytime for work until they are within six months of their release from prison. If they begin such programs earlier, Mr. Manson said, they are more inclined to tire of the situation, or to try to take some advantage of it, often creating hard feelings in the community and spoiling things for the others.

Disparity in Sentences

Inmates could be better understood and treated if the disparity in sentencing were done away with, Commissioner Manson maintains, and in this respect he is supported by a growing number of prison officials, judges and other criminal justice authorities around the country.

In Connecticut, depending on the judge or the parole board or both, a man who deliberately murders another might be sentenced to death or set free.

Mr. Manson noted that close to $4 million was spent in a year on rehabilitative programs in Connecticut—14 percent of the corrections budget.

"Rehabilitation as a goal for all our inmates has never been attained and probably is not attainable," the Commissioner said.

"There are some inmates who benefit," he said. "But for most, our goals are now purely safe and humane confinement."

A Partial Accord Reached In Anheuser-Busch Dispute

ST. LOUIS, May 31 (UPI)—A partial settlement was reached today in the complex union dispute that has kept 4,000 employees out of work since they ended their 13-week strike at the headquarters plant of Anheuser-Busch Inc.

Beer Bottlers Local 1187 reached agreement on a new contract last week but members have not reported for work, honoring picket lines set up by other teamster locals.

Today the 12 striking members of Local 133, which represents truck drivers, agreed not to set up picket lines if the brewery abides by any decision reached in the strike against wholesalers.

Irate Riders, Delayed 7 Hours, Delay Their Charter Jet for 36

JACKSON, Miss., May 31 (AP)—After giving the charter airline a taste of its own medicine, a county judge today dropped a legal action that had grounded a World Airways jet for more than 36 hours. The DC-8's 243 passengers returning from a nine-day visit in Britain got caught in the middle of a labor dispute between the airline and a striking teamsters local representing most of World's employees. The flight took 24 hours, at least seven hours longer than the passengers expected. First, they were delayed on board for five hours before the plane took off in London. Then, when the plane landed in Bangor, Me., for a customs check, the passengers said they had been delayed for two more hours. When the plane reached Mississippi yesterday, one passenger, Hinds County Circuit Judge Francis Bowling, obtained a writ of attachment holding the plane in Jackson. The judge said he felt he had got his point across. "Both

Reagan Will Go To Ohio For Weekend Campaigning

LOS ANGELES, May 31 (AP)—Ronald Reagan, apparently convinced that he can spare the time from his campaign in California, will spend next weekend seeking votes in the Ohio Presidential primary election. John P. Sears, Mr. Reagan's national campaign manager, said today that the former California Governor would go to Ohio to capitalize on support that "has been increasing steadily" in the campaign there. Mr. Reagan and President Ford are competing on June 8 for 187 Republican nominating votes in the California primary, a winner-take-all contest. Ohio and New Jersey also will hold primaries that day. David Liggett, Mr. Ford's California campaign director, said that Mr. Reagan's decision to go East for two days clearly was a mark of confidence about California. "It could be overconfidence," Mr. Liggett added, though he described Mr. Ford as the underdog in the state where Mr. Reagan was twice elected Governor.

Leftists and Florence Police Clash Near Rightist Meeting

FLORENCE, Italy, May 31 (UPI)—The police fired tear-gas grenades tonight to disperse leftist demonstrators who were barred from a political speech by Giorgio Almirante, the leader of the Italian Social Movement-National Right Wing. The demonstrators were throwing stones, the police said. Incendiary missiles set several automobiles afire and many shops and bars lowered their shutters for hours until calm returned. The police said seven persons, including three policemen, were treated for injuries and two were arrested. Mr. Almirante addressed about 150 people in the Piazza Strozzi for half an hour. The clashes with the leftists and the police occurred in nearby streets before and after he spoke. The leader of the Neo-Fascist group is campaigning for next month's Parliament elections.

He will never call it quits," a longtime aide, who added
Mr. Rockefeller "certainly

Adding to the doubts about Rockefeller's disclaimers is cheerleading of Richard M.
Eisenbaum, the Republican the chairman and Mr. Rocke-ler's principal political agent this state. Mr. Eisenbaum s repeatedly suggested that Rockefeller would strengthen the Republican ticket as a ce-Presidential candidate.

Mr. Eisenbaum ever goes so far as to hail Mr. Rockefeller Presidential timber, although discreetly bows to President Ford's priority for that nomination.

Along with the doubts about Rockefeller's intentions, ere is even greater doubt at President Ford, if nominated himself, would risk alien-ating the conservative wing of the party by selecting Mr.
Rockefeller as his running mate. "It's foolish to be expecting anything," said a Rockeler adviser. "And he's behind the age of foolishness," the adviser added.

If Mr. Rockefeller is not the candidate himself, typically he ants a voice in the selection his successor. The Vice President in an interview last week, for example, was obviously cool to three Vice-Presidential prospects, Mr. Reagan, ohn B. Connally and Senator James L. Buckley, indicating that they appealed to narrow constituencies.

If he does leave government after nearly two decades of full-time, pressurized service in New York and Washington, what then?

Mr. Rockefeller himself noted at a news conference that, as private citizen during the Roosevelt and Eisenhower Administration, he had prepared adviser of various phases of government. As a result, he reflected, he was named Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs by President Roosevelt and as chairman of a committee on government reorganization by President Eisenhower.

"There are many ways to serve your country," said Mr.
Rockefeller.

And a New York Republican official, only partly facetiously, marked. "He'll probably tackle something like world hunger."
He reflected the general view of those who know Mr. Rockeler that he is not likely to go anywhere even if his formal government services are about to end.

Liberties Union Booklet Lists What Street Protesters Can and Cannot Legally Do

By PETER KIBBS

In view of the likelihood of demonstrations when the Democratic National Convention meets here next month, the New York Civil Liberties Union Foundation has published an eight-page leaflet on free speech called "Your Rights on the Street."

The leaflet says, among other things, that "a nonviolent group" aiming to "make a political point" may lawfully march along a public sidewalk.

"Noise, such as singing and chanting, the stopping of traffic on cross streets, even inconvenience to pedestrians, do not make such a march into a breach of the peace (disorderly conduct)," it says.

"Sections of the disorderly conduct statute, such as that penalizing congregating together and failing to move on when ordered to do so, may seem to apply," the leaflet says, "but the U.S. Supreme Court has repeatedly held that a nonviolent march on the sidewalk of a public street is protected."

Ira Glasser, executive director, reported that the group had offered to cooperate with Police Commissioner Michael J. Code in distributing the leaflet "as an informational aid to the police, especially those who may be assigned to the Democratic convention." Single copies may be obtained free at 84 Fifth Avenue.

Warning on Street March

The civil liberties group warned that a march in the street—in contrast to a sidewalk—is "usually considered a parade," requiring an application to the Police Department at least 36 hours in advance for a permit.

Among other things, the group said that "arbitrary placement" of police barricades to prevent demonstrators from reaching an audience is "not enforceable," although it advised negotiations with the police.

While a city ordinance still on the books requires a permit for speeches, the group said this had been held unconstitutional as far back as 1951.

"You do not need a permit to speak on the street even if a crowd gathers, and if anyone asks whether you have a permit, say that none is required," the group advised.

"Police officers frequently believe that demonstrators must keep moving, but this is not the law," the group asserted. All distribution of political leaflets on public streets is "absolutely protected under the First Amendment" guaranteeing freedom of press and speech, it said.

"Use of tables to distribute or sell political literature is protected under the First Amendment," the leaflet said, reporting that court decisions have held that such activity did not violate laws against obstructing a sidewalk.

A permit is needed to use sound equipment, the group warned. An application should be made to the police precinct involved at least five days in advance, with a $5 fee, and the site cannot be too near a church, school or overly congested place.

Some Permits Necessary

"People have a right to distribute literature in public thoroughfares of buildings used generally by the public, such as the Port Authority Bus Terminal," the leaflet went on, adding that distribution of leaflets in New York City subways is protected, though subway regulations appear to forbid it on their face.

Park Department regulations "seem on their face to require a permit for every protest activity, including leafletting," the liberties group said. It advised applying for a permit, as called for seven days in advance, for at least "a better defense to any charge."

"In general, private landowners can prevent anyone from speaking or demonstrating on their property," the leaflet said.

"Although the law may be subject to constitutional objections, resistance—even to an unlawful arrest—may be a crime," the leaflet warned.

"Any resistance, including passive resistance (e.g., sitting down) is resisting arrest," the leaflet said, adding: "A third party may be charged with interfering for any physical interference, including standing in the way. Frequently make based on verbal (though the challenge is not justified). As for a rumormongering Civil Liberties Union had been discarding handbook or other rights of protest that no decision can be repaired."

Rothman's . . . the great Discount Men's Store for Expensive Clothing!

U.N. MEETS AT ROTHMAN'S!

Rarely a day goes by without a number of United Nations notables appearing on the Rothman scene. Apparently, the opportunity to buy America's finest clothing brands at huge savings is as intriguing to international diplomats as it is to our astute native New Yorkers.

It doesn't take an interpreter to explain why. Rothman's discounts are the real thing . . . thanks to special purchases, plus our low mark-up policy. The renowned brands we carry are easily recognizable, even with the labels removed. When, for example, a man sees a magnificent, custom-quality $260 suit that Rothman has discounted at $155, he knows full well that it is a custom-quality $260 suit. And the selection of models, shades, patterns and sizes is as vast as the savings.

It's the kind of "dollar diplomacy" that has made us internationally famous.

Blacks Have Made Political Gains but Signs of Frustration Are Widespread

st-Civil War Reconstruction matter how we stand, there's always some- thing to remind us that we'll be in bad shape and have a long way to go," said Lloyd D. Brown, one of the blacks on the bench of the Cuyahoga County Court of Appeals here in Cleveland.

Despite the high of blacks holding elec- tion, they represent only 10 percent of the total of offices in the country. In more, black economic progress, which many expected to go hand in hand with the election of blacks, does not solve the lingering problem of unemployment and discrim- ination against blacks at a 164 per year," reported J. Williams, president of the National Center for Political Education, a Washington-based group that conducts re- search on minority politics. At the rate, by the year 2000, there will be 15,000 blacks in office, but that figure only 3 percent of the total even when we're run- ning don't seem to be much," he said.

potential for Power

Judge Brown said 200 after the revolution in the age of black public offi- cials less than 1 percent. is potential for someone is there. The potential indication that black politi- cians has not peaked, is believe, but needs only nobilized.

example, of the 7,565 seats in statehouses the country, blacks hold 10 percent.

Legislatures of Alabama, and Michigan, but representation is not pro- portionate to the black popu- lation of those states.

blacks make up 25 percent of the population in Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina and South Carolina hold less than 10 percent of seats in their respective legislatures.

of 3,044 seats on county governing boards in the country, blacks hold only 557, and in cities where blacks are 50 percent or more of the popula- tion, they hold only 96 seats.

103 counties, mostly in the South, where blacks are at least 40 percent of the population, there are no black elected offi- cials in 67, or 65 percent of them.

"When that potential is mo- tivated, the results will be stag- gering, blacks will be able to control counties and cities and influence state governments and regional agencies and fed- eral programs like revenue- sharing and block grants that are based on political power, at least the way to 1600 Penn- sylvania Avenue.

"So you can see why there is frustration and apathy when you realize the potential that is not tapped and the road- blocks that stymie the poten- tial."

Meanwhile, Mr. Williams said that Center studies had found that political losses that might be attributable to frustration.

"This time last year there were 140 black mayors, but we lost 13 in the November elections."

"In a number of cases, blacks were replaced by whites. While blacks don't have an automatic right to public office, we don't know why that happened be- cause nobody's done any re- search on it," he said.

The figures do show that blacks are voting in declining numbers as a result of frustra- tion, he said, and noted, "no one has articulated to the mass- es of blacks why they should vote, why it's important. That's the big picture shows us still gaining and that is the important thing," he added.

Regarding the frustration and apathy at a time of extensive political gains, blacks give a number of explanations, includ- ing the following:

"A letup period always fol- lows an emotional campaign, especially if the black candi- date is victorious, as was Mr. Stokes, according to William Walker, publisher of the Cleve- land Call and Post, a black weekly newspaper. He said that more than 90 percent of the black electorate voted in 1967. The percentage went down when Mr. Stokes won again in 1969, and declined drastic- ally in the last three elections when Arnold J. Finkney, the black school board president, ran against Mayor Ralph J. Perk.

"As more gains are made, there is an awareness of those yet to be made, as well as a desire to see them attained at a faster rate—a phenomenon that accompanied civil rights progress in the 1960's."

"When the pace is not quick- ened, or the perception is that things are not happening fast enough, dissatisfaction sets in."

"Some blacks feel the major political parties are insensitive to the aspirations of blacks and other minority Americans. Mr. Stokes said the Democratic Party was structurally incapab- le of meeting the needs of the minority community, and he chastised those black politi- cians who said they felt they could wield power through the party." In order to be effective for the black community, black politicians have to operate outside the party structure," he said in a telephone interview.

"The reason there is so much apathy and frustration is that the black political leadership identifies with the party, and to blacks the party means lack of progress, low registration and voting because the party is satisfied with the status quo, and a return to cynicism and lack of belief in the leadership," he said.

"Blacks have got to go out- side the party and become a floating, self-interest group like the Jewish electorate, which remains energetic and sensitive to Jewish concerns and whose self-interest is not going to be determined by stock party answers but by individuals— from its support of Richard Nixon in 1972 to its support of Senator Henry M. Jackson (Democrat of Washington) today on Israel issues."

Judge Brown had another answer to the cause of frustra- tion among blacks that pre- vents them from coalescing with whites.

"Racism, pure and simple," he remarked. "There is the problem of division in the black community, but it was racism that caused Carl not to seek re-election and that led white Democrats to overwhelmingly vote for a conservative Republi- can. It is racism that prevents a black from being elected on a statewide ticket in Ohio and a lot of other states."

"Arnold Finkney, far and away, was the best qualified candidate in the mayor's race, but white Democrats would not support him. And of course, by the last election blacks were so turned off they didn't vote heavily at all."

The reaction of the white business community to the shift in political control from black to white helps to determine the success or failure of black politicians, which some blacks find frustrating.

The reaction to Carl Stokes and his style of assertive lead- ership was negative and it made his running the city that much tougher, according to blacks in Cleveland. In Atlanta, a once adversarial posture be- tween Mayor Jackson and the business community relaxed re- cently because it had begun to affect the city's positive national image. But the relaxa- tion has not prevented the busi- ness establishment from look- ing for a white liberal opponent for Mr. Jackson in next year's election, one of his aides said during an interview in Atlanta.

On the other hand, the business community in Los Angeles and Mayor Tom Bradley have enjoyed friendly relations since he was elected three years ago. "But Bradley was an ex-cop who ran against an abominable incumbent with an Orange County mentality, Sam Yorty," said one black official. "Whites wanted Yorty out so bad they found Tom acceptable. Besides, the mayor of Los Angeles has limited authority compared to the mayor of Cleveland."

To black citizens, like the Dossys in Cleveland or the Rogers Wards of Atlanta, middle class and not suffering, it matters whether their gar- bage is picked up as scheduled or whether the city fixes the chinkholes on their street, re- gardless whether the mayor is black or white. But they are resigned to the continuing ur- ban crisis, and said they would prefer to endure it under a black mayor.

"Things have really been tough under Perk. It's more than just that city services have deteriorated. But there's no longer is any sensitivity to the problems of the black community," said Myrna Dorsey, a clerk with the Social Security Administration.

"And it's such a shame that blacks are so divided that we can't seem to agree on anything anymore. Cleveland is so much different now. It's not the love- ly, lively place it once was."

WASHINGTON, May 31 (UPI)—A collection of public interest groups asked the Government today to ban construction of nuclear power plants near heavily populated cities.

In a petition filed with the Nuclear Regulatory Commis- sion, 23 groups said that no atomic reactor should be al- lowed within 40 miles of any major United States City. Most of the groups are public inter- est research groups organized by Ralph Nader, the consumer activist.

The groups said there were already plants in 15 states that violated or will violate either the proposed 40-mile limit, or the commission's own guide- lines on population density.

"Nuclear plants anywhere are a looming hazard to the lives and safety of citizens," the petition said. "Petitioners believe that an end to reliance on nu- clear power is the only true so- lution to the problem."

"However," the petition con- tinued, "as long as utilities are building and operating reactors, petitioners must insist that nu- clear facilities be sited solely in low population areas. In this way, as few people as possible will be forced to live under the shadow of a potential nuclear catastrophe."

Grand Street Boys Put Clubhouse Up for Sale

The Grand Street Boys Association, the philanthropic organization that originated on the Lower East Side 56 years ago, has put its seven- year-old midtown clubhouse up for sale for $2 million and opened talks with several fraternal and other groups here for rental of new head- quarters.

D. Olsan, the group's pres- ident, said prohibitive annual operating costs of about $140,000 have forced the as- sociation to close its six-story red brick Colonial-style at 131 West 56th Street. The building was constructed after the old clubhouse, at 106 West 55th Street, was de- molished in 1967, to make room for an office building.

Mr. Olsan said the new, cost-cutting plan to rent quarters would permit the expan- sion of the association's an- nual charitable work for hundreds of agencies repre- senting veterans, students, needy children, amateur ath- letes, the elderly and the poor.

Bubonic Plague Victim Out

EURELO, Colo., May 31 (AP)—A 22-year-old woman has been released from a hospital following treatment for bubonic plague, the Colorado Department of Health said today. The woman was the seventh confirmed human case of plague in Colorado since the disease was first found in this state in 1941, the department said.

U.S. Attorney Stresses Business Crime

By ARNOLD H. LUBASCH

Investigations of white-collar crimes will be emphasized by Robert B. Fiske Jr. in his key post as the United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York.

"I'm going to intensify the efforts on white-collar crime," Mr. Fiske remarked in an interview last week after his first three months as chief Federal prosecutor for the district, which covers Manhattan and 10 counties to the north.

Sitting in a high-backed leather armchair in his spacious office, he said that the two other principal targets of investigation would continue to be narcotics and corruption.

The 45-year-old prosecutor's special interest in stock-fraud cases and other business crimes grew out of his experience as a lawyer with Davis Polk & Wardwell, a major Wall Street law firm, where he was a litigation partner before becoming United States Attorney.

Known as a skillful lawyer who is soft-spoken and hard-working, Mr. Fiske discussed his plans for administering his staff of more than 100 lawyers, observing that "the office continues to attract the best and brightest young lawyers who are interested in Government service."

Difficulties Noted

He said his style as United States Attorney would be marked by "vigorous but fair" prosecution of cases, open communication throughout the office and close contact with the young assistants.

"The No. 1 priority is training assistants to be the best possible trial lawyers they can be," he said firmly.

Although he would like to regain the responsibility for prosecuting organized crime, Mr. Fiske said that he had established "a good working relationship" with William I. Aro-wald, chief of the strike force in the district.

Turning his attention to civil cases, Mr. Fiske said that he hoped to use "affirmative type cases to address some of the social problems of the city."

He cited civil cases by his predecessors attacking racial discrimination in several construction unions, saying "that's the type of thing we're anxious to do more of in other areas."

While Mr. Fiske, a Republican, realizes he may be replaced as United States Attorney if the Democrats win the Presidential election next November, he said he was "not trying to do a lot of things in a hurry."

He added, with a smile, that he hoped to remain "long enough to try some important cases."

Forest Fire in California Is Raging Out of Control

KING CITY, Calif., May 31 (AP)—Nearly 1,100 firefighters fought today to head off an out-of-control three-day blaze that burned 14,000 acres and threatened ranches and summer cabins in the Los Padres National Forest.

A small ranch building was destroyed, and the firefighters, who include prison inmates, battled gusty winds, severe drought conditions and rugged terrain to save 29 cabins and three cattle ranches in the forest 20 miles southwest of this central California town.

"Things don't look good," said a United States Forest Service spokesman, Loren Poore. "The fire is definitely out of control, and we don't know when it can be contained. Drought conditions are critical. Winds are coming up to 20 or 30 miles an hour, with gusts to 40."

75-Foot Flag Is Flown

NORWALK, Ohio, May 31 (AP)—Norwalk Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 2743 showed its colors today with what members contend is one of the largest flags ever flown. The 13-star flag, fashioned for a specially built, 160-foot tower, measures 46 by 75 feet.

Albany Agrees on a Plan to Consolidate Construction Agencies Into One Unit

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, May 31—Republicans and Democrats in the Assembly and Senate have reached agreement on a measure to consolidate all the state's construction agencies into one unit—a step they contend would bring use of state borrowing under more control by the Governor and the Legislature.

The legislation, which also has the backing of Stanley Steingut, the Assembly Speaker, would go much further than the statute approved earlier this year, at the height of the fiscal crisis, to put a "cap" on all further borrowing that is backed only by the state's "moral obligation" to repay.

It contemplates continued "moral obligation" financing with the stipulation that such project-by-project basis by the Legislature, thereby rejecting the position advocated by Arthur Levitt, the state comptroller, who has demanded an amendment to the State Constitution prohibiting all "moral obligation" borrowing.

Mr. Levitt's position, plus the fact that Governor Carey's office is also studying the agency problem, insures that whatever the Legislature decides to do this year on the subject is going to be filled with controversy. Despite the endorsement of a range of Republicans and Democrats in leadership positions, legislative aides said the bill being introduced as a result of last week's agreement might not be the subject of any action this year.

Nonetheless, the bill is a significant development in the state's struggle to set its shaky finances on a sounder basis in the wake of this year's fiscal crisis. A major ingredient in the crisis was the inability of the state's construction agencies—particularly the State Housing Finance Agency—to market any of their securities or raise the money needed to redeem notes falling due.

A $2.6 billion package of financing arrangements was eventually pieced together to guarantee the completion of dozens of agency projects. However, the state has abandoned any plans to begin construction on any new projects in the immediate future.

Part of the $2.6 billion package was the creation of a new Public Authorities Control Board, consisting of Peter C. Goldmark Jr., the State Budget Director; John J. Marchi, Republican of Staten Island and chairman of the Senate Finance Committee; and Burton G. Hecht, a Bronx Democrat who is chairman of the Assembly Ways and Means Committee.

This agency has already had three meetings to examine and select which state construction projects are to be suspended, and which are to go ahead. The bill agreed upon in the Legislature would create a new New York State Community Development and Facilities Corporation, designed to consolidate the work of 38 different construction and design agencies, with an eye toward streamlining design and building procedures as well as exerting more control over individual projects.

The new corporation would be run by appointees of the Governor, with some of the appointees nominated by the Legislature. Also, a Public Authorities Financial Control Commission, with an advisory board of experts in construction and finance, would oversee the financing end of the state's construction activities.

All uses of state credit would come under the authority of the new agency—including the complicated "lease-back" arrangements that have led to so much of what critics term "back-door" financing. Under the "lease-back" arrangement, another unit of government issues the bonds, and the state agrees to pay the debt service through a long-term lease arrangement. This was the way the $1.5 billion Empire State Plaza—of Albany, N.Y.—was constructed by Albany County.

"Our objective is to insure that the state continues construction for the public good," said Mr. Steingut, "while avoiding the dangerous uncontrolled growth of Capitol activities and public authority borrowing that brought about the state's current fiscal crisis."

Being Racquet & Tennis Specialists For Over 50 Years Makes The Difference

IN RACQUET SELECTION

Feron's staff of experienced players help you select the racquet that is right for you and for your game, the right kind, weight, grip, balance. That's been our job for more than fifty years. We believe we are skilled at it. Whatever your choice, you can be sure of top quality at Feron's. We carry only the best, and we test new models on the courts ourselves before we add them to our line. That's why we guarantee every tennis racquet frame we sell against defects in construction or workmanship for one full year.

IN RACQUET STRINGING

Feron's specially trained racquet craftsmen are ready to custom-string your new racquet to your exact specifications or to restring your old one. (We're pros, too, in helping you select the right string tension for you, your racquet and your game.) We use only the top quality seasoned gut, the best nylon. We take time to string a racquet. Sand down each hole to prevent injury to the string. "Tune" for even tension as we pull the string through. The entire playing surface must be absolutely uniform, must "ring true". That's why we guarantee tennis stringing at Feron's, within standard tensions, against defects in quality or workmanship for a full three months. And, normally, we can give you 24-hour service, too.

IN REPAIRS AND REBUILDING

At Feron's, we're proud of maintaining high professional standards of craftsmanship in racquet repair and alteration work for our customers. Whether it's changing the weight of your racquet or adjusting its balance, changing the grip size or shape or merely putting on a new grip, we'll do the job promptly and with great care.

RACQUET REGISTRATION SERVICE

To top it off, your personal Racquet Registration Card contains the key data for each racquet you buy at Feron's so we can duplicate your selection promptly if need be.

City U. Tuition Up for Approval by Board Tonight

to maintain the quality of programs.

"The conditions probably will not be met in reality," said one of the eight remaining members of the 10-member board, who did not want to be identified, "but it allows some members to vote for the resolution and to make up a majority."

Board sources were reluctant to disclose details of the compromise, cautioning that advance publication could cause some members to balk.

The Board of Higher Education is the only agency that can impose tuition, and a majority of six members is required to approve such a resolution.

The six reportedly ready to accept tuition are Albert V. Manicisco, Nicholas Figueras and Loretta A. Conway, who are the three members appointed by Mayor Beame last Friday.

Harold M. Jacobs, a lawyer active in Orthodox Jewish affairs whom Mr. Beame elevated to the chairmanship following the resignation of Alfred A. Gardiner, James P. Murphy, executive vice president of the New York State Bankers Association, and Armand D'Angelo, chairman of the Educational and Cultural Trust Fund of the Electrical Industry, who was appointed by Governor Carey and who recently publicly declared himself as favoring tuition.

Governor to Name 2 Vivia Quinones, an administrator of Arthur C. Logan Memorial Hospital and the only black member, was believed likely to vote against tuition, and how Dr. Gurston D. Goldin, a psychiatrist, would vote was said to be uncertain.

In another development yesterday, sources close to the said.

Albany end of the university negotiations said the Governor was ready to fill the two remaining vacancies on the Board of Higher Education by naming David I. Ashe, a labor lawyer and former member of the board, and James R. Dumpson, former City Human Rights Administrator and Commissioner of the Department of Social Services.

The Governor's spokesman, James S. Vlasto, declined comment on the reported appointments, adding: "That's a decision that involves the Legislature."

Intertwined in the tuition question are fiscal, political and deeply felt emotional considerations.

New York City's government, suddenly forced to end the budget gimmickery it had practiced for years, finds itself discharging workers, cutting services and no longer able to afford the array of public programs that included a free college education.

Upstate and suburban legislators, whose votes are needed to help support the City University, have been critical of its high faculty salaries and of free tuition that has not been available to their own constituents.

Emotionally, New York has always cherished the opportunities it offered succeeding waves of immigrants, including a chance to pull oneself out of the slums through a free education.

A call for tuition came yesterday from the executive director of the Emergency Financial Control Board, which supervises New York's financial affairs.

"There's no more money and no more time to fool around," the official, Stephen Berger, said.

And so, he said, "cut the ballocoy, vote the program and get the 270,000 kids back to school."

He questioned, too, a proposal by 18 Democratic Assemblymen from the city for a $35 million annual "tuition assistance plan," which, they said, they would "insist upon" before voting for the package that will confront them in Albany.

Six of the 18 commandeered a portion of the West 42d Street sidewalk in front of the City University graduate center to publicize their plan, taking attention briefly from the smiling disciples of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon.

"Our estimate," said one of the Assemblymen, G. Oliver Koppell of the Bronx, "is that the flight of the middle class would cost the city far more."

Another, Charles E. Schumer of Brooklyn, conceded that they did not know where the money would come from. "It's our really our job to scour through every line of the budget," he said. "It's our job to set priorities."

Action Due in Albany When the show shifts to Albany—which politicians say will not happen until the city board votes tuition—separate opening acts are scheduled in the Democratic-controlled Assembly and the Republican-controlled Senate.

The Assembly leaders failed last week to win approval in their caucus for a $24 million advance to get the City University through the rest of its fiscal year, which ends June 30.

The leaders had sought a $470-million-a-year budget, which would have combined state and city contributions and, without saying it in so many words, tuition. They will try to negotiate a revised package with Governor Carey's staff.

The Senate leaders introduced a $36 million bill—money that Democrats insist is not really there—which would be divided two-thirds for the City University and one-third to rehire firemen and policemen laid off because of the city's fiscal tribulations.

That is what Albany politicians call a "one-house bill" but, as a bargaining counter, the Senate Republicans expect to pass it today.

Dominate by upstate and suburban members, the Senate, according to some staff members, is unlikely to vote any added state aid for the City University without insisting on something for the State University, where its constituents send "We're not just going to say, 'You're in trouble, CUNY? Here's a pot of money'" one official said.

Whatever compromise is reached, Albany politicians say, the traditional 50-50 split in city and state support of the City University's senior colleges is certain to end. Mayor Beame, himself a graduate of a city college, has said that the city must phase out its contribution completely. Governor Carey's plan involves continued city support, with some of the government burden to be eased by tuition charges.

The Board of Higher Education compromise that is expected to be voted at tonight's closed-door meeting was proposed, but failed to carry, at the board's meeting last Monday. This was followed by the resignation of four members over the state-aid issue.

AT IMPASSE

to Soften Education Effect on City Fail

MARY BREASTED

Mayor's office, the New York City Board of Education, sponsors of the state's Stavisky-Goodman Law have an impasse in their efforts to negotiate a compromise that might soften the law, which requires the city to allocate 21 percent of its expense budget to the Board of Education. The city approved the law in 1974, but the Mayor's office said it would not comply with the law, dismissing 5,000 people from parts of city government or spending money it does not have. The city's Corporation Counsel, Bernard Richardson, said that the law is unconstitutional and in violation of the mandate of the State's Emergency Financial Control Board that the city must eliminate its deficit in the next three years.

Mayor is not above the law, Mr. Stavisky said in Albany last week. "not any more than Richard Nixon was above the law."

Stavisky was provoked by the Mayor's expense budget, which ignored his law. The passage of the budget—by affirmative vote of the Board of Estimate—would mean the City's default when the City does not vote on it. Stavisky-Goodman law, Assemblyman maintained.

There's 'No Conflict' is constitutional," he insisted. "There is no conflict between the Emergency Financial Control Board law for which I voted. In fact, in that law, there is a prohibition against the Control Board's interfering with the internal expenditures of the city."

The law is effective retroactively to Feb. 1 of this year. The formula it contains requires the city to spend the same portion for education from the date of the law's implementation as the average of what it spent in the previous 10 years.

Mr. Stavisky has drafted a companion amendment that would make the law effective as of July 1, a shift that would bring down the three-year average for education spending. The spending in the last year has been proportionately lower than education spending in previous years.

'Act of Defiance'

"I was prepared to discuss with the city representatives a companion amendment, but the city has engaged in an open act of defiance," Mr. Stavisky said. "I will withhold the amendment until the proposed court challenge has been exhausted." Deputy Mayor John E. Zucchi has said he is willing to talk to anybody on the issue. "We talked two weeks ago with all participants and told them the city has no money," he said earlier this week.

The Mayor's press secretary, Sidney J. Frigand, said that the Board of Education and the United Federation of Teachers, with supporters of the Stavisky-Goodman law "just don't want to believe that we don't have any money."

"They think we can find money somewhere, but we can't," he added.

The Board of Education, asserting that it would be entitled to $121 million in additional funds if the city obeyed the Stavisky-Goodman law, is nevertheless hesitant to surge ahead and spend money the city is not willing to authorize. Privately, some board members have urged planning as if the additional funds will be coming, but others on the board have called that a risky prospect, since the city Comptroller's office could always refuse to pay the bills. And if the board lost its suit to force the city to pay, it could be held liable for the money.

As matters stood at the end of last week, the board was seeking legal counsel—it will have to hire outside lawyers since it cannot use manpower from the Corporation Counsel's office on this matter—to "set the machinery in motion" for a lawsuit, as its spokesman put it.

And Mr. Stavisky and Mr. Zucchi were not talking to each other, each convinced that the other was wrong.

3 Killed in Upstate Crash

HAMBURG, N.Y., May 31 (AP)—A head-on crash in this Onondaga County town this afternoon killed three persons—including an infant delivered prematurely shortly after the accident—and critically injured a fourth. Authorities identified the dead as Sylvia Kulak, 33 years old of Niagara Falls; her infant daughter, and Sara Scamorra, 67, of Cheektowaga. Mrs. Scamorra's husband, Anthony, 78, was in critical condition at Buffalo Mercy Hospital. The police said the Kulak and Scamorra cars collided after one of the vehicles apparently went out of control.

"Free checking at The Bowery is different from 'free' checking at most commercial banks."

—Joe DiMaggio

- Unlike most commercial banks; you can have a free Bowery checking account... Without a minimum balance in a savings account.
- Without keeping a minimum balance in your checking account.
- Without a per-check charge.
- Without a monthly service charge.

For years many commercial banks have talked about their so-called free checking accounts.

So-called because you have to keep a minimum balance in a savings account. A minimum which can be as high as $1,000 at some commercial banks. Not exactly "free" checking!

When we say free checking we mean free. No strings attached. You don't even need a minimum balance in a savings account. But with the dividends we're paying these days, opening a Bowery savings account is a very good investment.

How much can you make? More than you can get on passbook savings at any commercial bank. Free Bowery checking, plus the highest dividends allowed on passbook savings, gives you the kind of one-stop banking no commercial bank can offer.

State Monitor Calls Most New York City Budget Cuts Uncertain

The state's chief monitor for New York City's cost-cutting program said yesterday that the city could not be sure of $240 million worth of savings in its $360 million economy plan for 1977.

In a report to both the State Emergency Financial Control Board and the Municipal Assistance Corporation, Sidney Schwartz, a special deputy state comptroller, asserted that $2 million in the city's planned 1977 reductions were unobtainable and that $238.7 million additional projected cuts were not certain.

Mr. Schwartz was highly critical of the city's dealings with the board, which is the Control Board's monitoring arm. He said his office's work had been "hampered by the unwilling-ness of some city officials to provide information when and as requested, and because certain covered organizations would not accede to the city's budget limitations."

He said the office of the city's Budget Director, Donald Kummerfeld, had in some cases been unwilling to provide data in the manner requested, particularly in public assistance and medical assistance programs.

Reply by the City

Mr. Kummerfeld disputed Mr. Schwartz's conclusions and said that "under a newly designed quarterly allocation and personnel ceiling control system," the city would be able to detect shortfalls in the cost-reduction programs in time to compensate for them with alternate measures.

"Even though in some agencies the reductions may not be detailed by program or line," Mr. Kummerfeld said, "it must be remembered that the money has been taken out of the budget and the reductions are not uncertain in aggregate merely because at this time particular detail is not available."

Mr. Schwartz said in his report that only one city agency, the Department of Mental Health and Retardation Services, had actually drawn up a comprehensive analysis of how it planned to put into effect the reductions mandated for it under the city's overall three-year cost-cutting plan.

Mr. Schwartz's report said that the Board of Education in contrast, had refused to "supply any information whatsoever" about its cost-cutting program.

The Board of Education contends that the Mayor's expense budget violates state law because it is not designed according to the formula of the Stuyvesant-Goodman bill, which says the board should get about 21 percent of the total expense budget.

Mayor Beame's office has called the law unconstitutional, and the whole matter may be resolved by the courts.

Mr. Schwartz's report was also critical of the Board of Higher Education saying it had refused to "comment on the dollar reduction contained in the March 26, 1976, plan to close the budget gap."

Mr. Schwartz's report covered $318.3 million, or 80 percent, of the $359.9 million in annual cost-reduction programs designed for the city's next fiscal year, and $16 million, or 64 percent, of the $23.5 million in revenue-increase proposals for the same period.

Chess: Think, Reason, Consider, But Don't Take Too Long

By ROBERT BYRNE

What is the ideal time allowance for a tournament game? Since the mid-19th century, when such an innovative, but excessively careful, player as the American Louis Paulsen, would drive Paul Morphy to distraction by converting every encounter into an all-day affair, it has been recognized that reflection time must be limited.

After considerable experimenting, the rate of 40 moves in two and a half hours has become standard in international play. It is sufficient for prosecuting a middle game even in the most unfavorable case when an opponent's opening novelty requires expending a fair amount of time on the early stages of play. Nevertheless, reasonably good games can be produced even under the fast time limit of 40 moves in one hour, the regulation in effect for the National Chess League, a nine-city round-robin of six-man teams played by telephone. In the match between the New York Threats and the Cleveland King Hunters, Sel Matara of New York turned in a creditable positional performance to defeat Dimitri Ghizdavu of Cleveland, though the two teams fought to a 3-3 tie.

In the typically slow developing Taimanov variation, Matara's 7... Nc3; 8... Qc2 enabled Ghizdavu to rush his queen into play and yet it is hard to see how White could have benefited from that. Of course, Matara had to stay out of the trap 9... P-N5; 10 N-R4, QxQB; 11 N-N6, R-N1; 12 R-QB1, after which Black can kiss his queen goodbye.

Ghizdavu should have consolidated his position by 14 R-B2, but, entranced by the prospect of matching the black QP, he spoiled his game by the precipitous advance 14 P-K5. On Matara's 14... Bc3, White should have settled for 15 RxB, N-N5; 16 K-R1, NxB; 17 QcN, although Black, with the stronger minor piece, would have had the edge after 17... P-Q3.

What Ghizdavu had overlooked was that after 16 QxP, B-R4, Black had to recover his pawn. Moreover, the exchanges ending with 19... RxB gave Black threats of operating against the backward QBP and the artificially isolated White KP.

Ghizdavu did well to create counterplay by 20 R-Q8 and 21 R-N6, but he erred with 22 R-K4? Indeed, it would have been weak to capture 22 RxB, RxB; 23

Position after 17... NcP

NcR, R-Q7, when Black recovers his pawn and obtains control of the seventh rank. However, he might have saved the day by simplifying with 22 R-Q1, R-Rch; 23 NcR, P-N4; 24 N-B3, RxB; 25 RxB.

Matara's 27... K-N2 threatened an eventual attack on the KP by 28... K-N5 and 29... K-B4 and Ghizdavu had nothing better to do than to wait it out. Instead, his 28 R-K7 permitted the breakthrough 28... P-QN5, resulting in the loss of the QBP.

After Matara's 33... N-B5ch, there was nothing for White but to lose another pawn, and, with no defensive prospects short of sorcery, Ghizdavu resigned.

Bridge: Garber and Lindenman Take Goldman Pairs Championship

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

Two young New York experts, Keith Garber and Carl Lindenman, won the Goldman pairs championship at the New York Hilton Hotel Sunday night, adding their names to a 46-year-list of champions that includes many of the greatest figures in the history of the game. In second position were Alan Sontag, one of the game's most formidable performers, and Harshad Shukla of New York City.

A bold action by Garber reaped a harvest of points in the final session and more than accounted for the margin of victory. He sat South on the diagramed deal, and heard his left-hand opponent open with one no-trump and his right-hand opponent use Stayman. The two-diamond rebid denied a major suit, and Lindenman doubled to show diamonds.

When East bid two spades, Garber had an obvious bid of three diamonds available to him. He was not interested in an 11-trick game in the face of the no-trump opening and a partner who could not act immediately. Nevertheless, Garber jumped to four diamonds.

His idea was that East-West would not sell out to three diamonds and might be about to find a good heart fit. In fact, four hearts would have been an interesting contract. This could not be defeated by a quick spade ruff, for the declarer would be able to clear trumps and discard clubs on spades to avoid a club loser.

West's penalty double set up a situation in which one side or the other was slated for a top score. As North-South were vulnerable, down one for a loss of 200 points was likely to be a disaster. Garber's bid would have been much less risky if he had not been vulnerable.

It turned out that four diamonds doubled was unbeatable, for a rather delicate reason: East held both 10-9 of clubs. In practice, West cashed two club winners and the heart ace, after which it was easy for Garber to pick up the diamond king with a finesse and claim the contract for a score of 730 points.

It might seem that South was due to lose two heart tricks if the defenders did not play the suit for him. But this was not so because of the position of the club spots. If West had not cashed his heart ace, the declarer

Possibility of Bomb Studied In Explosion Fatal to Three

VERNON, Calif., May 31 (AP)—An explosion that killed three persons and injured 17 at a meat packing plant may have been caused by refrigeration equipment, the authorities say. But they do not dismiss the possibility of a bomb. The powerful blast rocked the Safeway meat packing plant in this industrial suburb of Los Angeles yesterday, and the authorities cautiously blamed an ammonia-filled refrigeration system. "But we can't rule out the possibility of a bomb," said Capt. Richard Pavlovsky of the Vernon Fire Department. The three dead employees were identified as Emil Horst, 50, no address available; Olin Moulton, 45, of Hacienda Heights, and Leo Dooley, 59, of Bellflower.

Service physician. The royal family is billed by various unions. One union even suggests, after a careless maid has had her fingers pinched, that the rocking horse in the royal nursery should be screwed immovably to the floor as a dangerous piece of industrial equipment.

"King and Joker" is full of Mr. Dickinson's usual flourishes: When the King inspects a guard of honor, he looks at the constables not with a military, but a medical eye and delivers silent diagnoses:
"Asthma, poor sod... Whisky... Can that moonface be the start of Addison's disease?" Because the author loves a plot convolution in much the same way that a lecher loves a voluptuous curve, the King has a double, a "look-alike," whom he keeps around for amusement. It becomes crucial to the plot to know whether it is the double or the King himself who is discovered in the under-nurse's bed.

A Noble Ménage à Trois
While the Joker's pranks grow increasingly vicious and violent, they are not the center of the action. They simply provoke a series of revelations into the intimate life and history of the royal family, a succession of agonizing re-appraisals, as one of our own national figureheads used to say. The Joker's real crime—and here we see the moral of Mr. Dickinson's novel—is the invasion of privacy. Instead of assassinating the King in classical style, the Joker wants to assassinate his reputation in what one might call the modern style.

It turns out, too, that the King and Queen are living in a ménage à trois for the most noble reasons imaginable. King Victor makes a speech on the radio much like the real Edward's abdication speech, with the difference that he is defending the woman he loves not against the fact that she is divorced, but the allegation that she is hemophiliac and he threatens to abdicate only if he cannot marry her with public approval.

Mr. Dickinson's antic touches seem to grow with each book, as he settles into his idiosyncratic style. Old Nanny Durdy still greets the Prince and Princess with "Have you done your business?" Shakespeare is taken to task for using the word "twangling" to describe the harp. The King's mother disparages British royalty:
"This country has no history," she scoffs.
"How many Kings have you assassinated?
One! And you did that by committee."

In "King and Joker," Mr. Dickinson continues to move away from the conventional suspense novel and his characters are becoming more convincing with each book.
King Victor is especially good. We know him so well that we can feel with him even when he is infuriated by government figures who say "refute" when they mean "repudiate." Princess Louise prefers the dreamlike royalty of adolescence to the magna cum laude of adulthood. As a princess, she has been born into a "double bind";
in an age of alienation, she stands doubly alone.

Who killed the concept of nobility?— not who killed Roger Ackroyd?—is the theme of "King and Joker." If we take nobility in its widest sense, we might say that Mr. Dickinson's subject is the crime of the century.

Lawyer Weds Miss Sutton Bride of D. V. Schuster

Aviva Diamant

At the Oakland Jewish Center in Bayside, Queens, yesterday afternoon, Aviva Diamant and Steven Joel Kaufman, associates with the New York law firm of Fried, Frank, Harris, Shriver & Jacobson, were married by Rabbi Joseph Schevelowitz.

The bride, daughter of Ann Diamant of Rego Park, Queens, and the late Herman Diamant, will retain her maiden name. She graduated cum laude from City College and with the class of '72 from the Columbia Law School, where she was a Kent Scholar. Her father was senior internal accountant for Waldbaum Inc., the supermarket chain.

Mr. Kaufman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kaufman of Maspeth, Queens, graduated magna cum laude from Columbia College and with the class of '73 from the Yale Law School. His father owns Badian's Inc., an industrial clothing concern in Long Island City, Queens.

Mr. Schuster, who graduated from St. Mark's School and Colby College, received a master's degree in journalism from Boston University. He is a doctoral candidate at the New York University School of Education and is teaching social studies at St. Bernard's School in Manhattan. He is author of "Bad Blood Among Brothers," published by Viking Press in 1972. His father is a former marketing consultant for Young & Rubicam.

R. C. Liebman Weds Elaine S. Friedman

Elaine S. Friedman

Elaine Susan Friedman, a librarian with the University of Michigan, was married yesterday in Roslyn, L.I., to Robert Curtis Liebman, a graduate student at Michigan.

The ceremony was performed in the Roslyn Country Club by Rabbi Mayer I. Gruber, brother-in-law of the bride. He was assisted by Rabbi Henry Dicker.

The parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Abe Friedman of Little Neck, Queens, and Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Liebman of Schenectady, N. Y. Mr. Friedman is manager of stores for Trans World Airlines in New York and Mr. Liebman is with the turbine engineering section of the General Electric Company in Schenectady.

The bride and her husband were graduated from Harpur College. Mrs. Liebman received a master's degree in library science from Michigan. Mr. Liebman is working on a joint doctorate in history and sociology at the Rensselaer School of Graduate Studies at Michigan.

Nancy Alkon Is Bride
Nancy Sue Alkon and Dr. Jeffrey Lewis Oberman were married yesterday afternoon in Temple Gates of Zion in Valley Stream, L.I., by Rabbi Simon Resnikoff. The bride, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Alkon of Valley Stream, graduated from the State University of New York at Albany. Her husband is an alumnus of the Albany Medical Center of Union University. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin A. Oberman of Flushing, Queens.

Japan's Nonproliferation

The long-awaited approval by the Japanese Parliament of the Nonproliferation Treaty (NPT) was a significant advance in worldwide efforts to control the spread of nuclear weapons—just as, in a different way, was the signing a few days later of the Ford-Brezhnev treaty restricting peaceful nuclear explosions.

The six years that have passed since Tokyo signed the treaty testify to the political sensitivity in Japan of this formal renunciation of atomic arms. But the fact that Japan's leaders have finally overcome their doubts should encourage other countries now leaning toward the nuclear option to take the NPT pledge.

Japan has two nuclear neighbors, the Soviet Union and China, and was at war with both only three decades ago. Yet, unlike India, Japan has not permitted China's development of a nuclear deterrent to spur latent nuclear ambitions. It is true that Japan, as the only nation ever to suffer atomic attack, has chosen a pacifist course since World War II. It is tragic that India, with the Gandhi-Nehru tradition of nonviolence, has not been inspired to do the same.

In the three decades after Hiroshima, only the five major powers that are permanent members of the United Nations Security Council exploded nuclear devices—until India's first atomic test two years ago. In an effort to discourage a second Indian explosion—and similar ambitions elsewhere—Canada has indefinitely suspended civilian nuclear aid to New Delhi, which diverted material for its explosive from a Canadian reactor.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has adopted the Symington amendment to the foreign military aid bill, cutting off American economic and military assistance to any nation importing a nationally controlled nuclear reprocessing plant capable of producing weapons-grade plutonium, the explosive for atomic bombs. Senator Symington's amendment strikes at the chief proliferation danger now: purchase by third-world countries of pilot plutonium reprocessing plants, such as those sold to Brazil by West Germany and to Pakistan by France.

Japan's example, as the 96th NPT adherent, should shore up confidence in the future of nonproliferation efforts. To India and other nuclear-tempted countries, Japan is demonstrating again that a nation that achieves economic success can exert political influence in the world through peaceful diplomacy without seeking significant military strength, particularly the nuclear kind.

... France's Proliferation

In the annals of American relations with its oldest ally, Valéry Giscard d'Estaing will be recorded as the French President who reversed the deterioration that began almost two decades ago with the return to power of Gen. Charles de Gaulle. The improved atmosphere was evident throughout his recent Bicentennial visit.

But that visit also focused attention unavoidably on the disagreements that remain over NATO, the Common Market, the Middle East and, most important currently, the global spread of nuclear weapons technology.

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing claims credit personally for canceling France's sale to South Korea of a pilot reprocessing plant to extract plutonium, the explosive used in atom bombs, from spent power reactor fuel rods. It is known that South Korea backed out of the deal under extreme American pressure, but France's President said that his decision preceded this development.

Yet Mr. Giscard d'Estaing defends France's sale of a similar plant to Pakistan on the ground that the plutonium, which has no commercial use at present, would ultimately be used as a power reactor fuel in place of slightly enriched uranium. Inspection, he argues, would prevent diversion. This argument has been publicly rejected by Dr. Fred Ikle, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Inspection by the Vienna-based International Atomic Energy Agency is occasional and far from foolproof. There are too few inspectors. They rely heavily on data supplied by the country under "safeguards." Stockpiled plutonium could be converted into bombs between inspections. The agency is not empowered to inquire into unsafeguarded nuclear plants and does not seek out possible clandestine facilities. Safeguards agreements could be unilaterally abrogated. No sanctions exist to enforce them.

That is why the United States and other nuclear supplier countries have for three decades refused to export plutonium reprocessing plants. Boon broke with this policy last June to capture a $4 billion power reactor order from Brazil and is opening similar talks with Iran—arguing that France will sell the reprocessing technology if West Germany doesn't. If this evolution continues, a dozen third-world countries will be producing enough plutonium by the 1990's to make 3,000 Hiroshima-size bombs yearly, a certain prescription for world disaster.

A summit-level approach to West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and further discussions with Mr. Giscard d'Estaing are essential if a moratorium on such exports is to be restored. Unfortunately, the outlook for curbing nuclear proliferation has now been worsened by the announcement that a French consortium will build South Africa's first nuclear power plant.

Food Stamp Suit

Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz is at it again. He has characterized the plaintiffs in a lawsuit brought to enjoin the Administration's new food stamp regulations as "bleeding hearts" in search of a "soft-headed judge" who will allow affluent students to take advantage of the program.

In fact, the Administration's proposed regulations are so severe that they have aroused a wide spectrum of citizens in opposition. Among Mr. Butz's "soft-headed" plaintiffs are twenty-six states, fifty-three labor unions, twenty-two church groups as well as many food stamp families. The Administration has forced, for the purposes of this suit, such strange alliances as the United Farm Workers and the Teamsters, the State of Louisiana and the N.A.A.C.P.

It is clear from even a cursory review of the regulations why there is such a strong sense of outrage against them. More than 5 million people would be dropped entirely from the program, and another 5.5 million would receive reduced benefits. The regulations contain several devices designed to commit mayhem on the nation's major nutrition program. Principal among them are the following:

- A formula that discriminates so severely against the working poor that under it, it is possible for a family of four with a net earned income of $5,800 to be ineligible for food stamps while a similar family of four with $5,800 in unearned income—from welfare, pensions or other similar sources—might be eligible for as much as $600 in annual benefits.

- A requirement for averaging income over the three months prior to the application for food stamps that would penalize migratory workers, people who had just been laid off and seasonal workers.

- A provision that would make many recipients pay a larger share of their income for food stamps, thus especially burdening the elderly and other families with heavy expenses.

Any program which fosters hunger, penalizes poor workers and imposes blind inflexibility is worse than "soft-headed." It is both foolish and cruel.

West Point's Dilemma

The charges of widespread cheating at West Point can no longer be sensibly discussed merely in terms of the actual number of cadets involved in the scandal. The claim of the 48 accused cadets that hundreds of others have been guilty of similar transgressions may prove to be an exaggeration. But it is evident that the honor code around which the charges revolve has not been working for some time. The real question is whether that code can or should be salvaged in its traditional form.

The code states that a cadet "will not lie, cheat or steal, or tolerate those who do." Under the code, there is only one penalty for any violation—expulsion from the academy. In principle this means that this penalty must be invoked with its utter finality, whether it is a serious breach of honor or something resembling a white lie that is at issue.

It is absurd to subscribe to the fiction of military honor so pure and unbending as to permit an evenhanded enforcement of that code. Cadets are human. An irrationally absolute code that refuses to differentiate between human foibles and real dishonesty can only have the effect of creating a system under which some cadets join together in mutual protectiveness, while exposing others, as scapegoats, to the full brunt of the code's retribution.

That this has been happening at West Point is strongly suggested by charges of inhumane treatment of alleged violators at the hands of some prominent members of the cadets' own honor board. Such an approach to honor unfortunately mars military justice.

The combination of cruel hazing and excessive academic pressures, particularly on new cadets, has repeatedly given rise to cheating problems at the military academies in the past. There is need for a reassessment of military education beyond a narrow review of the honor code. Such a review cannot be effectively and credibly carried out from inside the academies without extensive contributions from civilian experts. A realistic goal is not the creation of some mythical military demigods but the education and training of intelligent and honest young officers.

The Surrogate Watch

The maneuvering has started in the regular and reform ranks of the Democratic Party in Manhattan and Brooklyn for the patronage-laden posts of Surrogate—the specialized court with jurisdiction over estates. The prospect of appointing lucrative guardianships has traditionally motivated the political machines to capture that spot for one of their trusted judges who can then spread the largesse among the party faithful.

The race for Surrogate in Manhattan started long before the indictment of S. Samuel DiFalco on charges of official misconduct. At least ten aspirants for the job, most of them already on the bench, are making their moves early to replace Surrogate DiFalco, who reaches the mandatory retirement age of 70 this year. But the indictment underscores what is wrong with the present method of running for party favor, in all probability getting into a primary contest, and then facing the electorate. The Democratic designation is tantamount to election in both counties.

The best that can be hoped for at the moment is that the candidates for the position be carefully prescreened in an open process that selects a highly qualified jurist. Regular and reform panels will probably narrow the candidates to three who have been approved and possibly settle for one. But some of the judges are expected to fight for the nomination in the primary on Sept. 14.

There is no mystery about the way to break the patronage system. An Office of Public Guardian should be created to select guardians impartially and routinely from qualified lists. Such a reform would go far toward ending the influence of well-connected clubhouse lawyers who have a hold on the Surrogate, and reducing the administrative costs of estates.

An even more fundamental reform is now before the State Legislature. As part of Governor Carey's court package, the Surrogates' Courts would be abolished as separate entities and become part (as would all other specialized courts) of the Supreme Court. The question whether New York County needs two Surrogates would become moot under a unified court system. A number of Supreme Court judges would simply handle estate matters instead of leaving the power of patronage in the hands of a single, elected Surrogate.

Letters to the Editor

To Conserve Social Security Funds

To the Editor:

In his news story about deficits in Social Security financing (May 25), Edwin Dale omitted to mention one very productive method of conserving these funds—a method already operating, but only minimally.

To illustrate, take the example of a Social Security beneficiary who, through self-employment, earned $4,800 in 1975. On this amount, she had to pay a Social Security self-employment tax of $378. In addition, she forfeited her benefits at the rate of 50 percent of all earnings over $2,520, including the $378 tax.

Since a penny saved is a penny earned, the Social Security Administration gained $1,519 through her earning $4,800. This is $405 more than the maximum Social Security self-employment tax of $1,113.90 on income of $14,400 or over, and it does not figure in any upward revision of the less-than-maximum benefits now received in this case.

Although it cannot control hiring practices in the country at large, the Social Security Administration could conserve sizable sums by staffing its own vast bureaucracy with people who are currently receiving Social Security benefits. These people would pay probably the maximum Social Security tax and forfeit their entire benefits besides. Any doubters about the ability of the elderly should be reminded of the ages of some of the more notable eminences on the political scene. Besides, the retirees now struggling to eke out their Social Security benefits by self-employment are on average exercising more initiative and ability than was ever demanded by the jobs they once held at higher pay.

There is at least one other good way of conserving Social Security funds. That is to withhold benefits from all persons whose total income, earned or not, exceeds some arbitrary but generous limit.

A basic purpose of Social Security cash benefits, as stated in a booklet issued by the Social Security Administration in 1968 ("Social Security Information for Young Families"), is to help prevent dependency by providing continuing income after a worker's retirement. This purpose is not served when benefits are paid to persons already well protected against dependency. There must be hundreds of thousands of beneficiaries in this situation.

Ronald Reagan, for example, was shown some time ago in the news media gleefully accepting his Social Security check. Perhaps he could find a way to do something about the earned-income inequity if he were receiving the President's salary.

CUNY Tuition

To the Editor:

The recent and continuing over tuition for CUNY, other things, a remarkable imagination in pursuit approaches to the fine university.

One alternative to the students tuition is to require graduates of the university set percentage of their limited period after it. Since some form of tuition certainty, this plan can countering many of it against it, while maintaining a free urban ur.

It is claimed that those by the imposition of dire be the upper-middle-class whose parents earn too much assistance yet afford the suggested fee would thus have another to remain in the city.

The above plan would share of the cost of it to be repaid by all on their earning power a acquired in the university also enable the city it returns to its investment those who leave the city ing their degrees. A si cooperation with Federal ties is all that is needed this program.

As one other alternative for a "payless furlough" percent salary "deferment" employees can be reformed to give a M.A.C. bond, at interest rate, to all of it payable at some later this should be done (city workers). Not only the current payroll, but eliminate the need to the M.A.C. bonds at an interest rate.

For Nadjari's Retention

To the Editor:

I disagree with the May 26 letter of Ira J. Raab in essence calling for the removal of Maurice H. Nadjari from his post as Special State Prosecutor for corruption in the criminal justice system.

It is a fact that our society is suffering from the immense degree of corruption of so many of our institutions, public and private.

It is also a fact that to ferret out corruption in the criminal justice system is a thankless job, fraught with obstacles at every turn. Corrupt judges and other dishonest elements of our law enforcement system, and corrupt politicians do not act out their criminal pursuits in an unsophisticated manner and subject to public scrutiny. To bring these malefactors to justice requires one whose incorruptibility is beyond question.

Certainly Mr. Nadjari has been a symbol of integrity, and if in his zeal to ferret out corruption he has committed errors of judgment, undoubtedly he is the greatest single force we have in New York City today to keep our government honest.

I recommend that Attorney General Lefkowitz, with the concurrence of Governor Carey, extend the term of Mr. Nadjari beyond the scheduled expiration date of June 30.

Lessons of Watergate

To the Editor:

Your May 23 editorial statement, "The narrow escape that ought to be Watergate's true lesson offers no guarantee of similar luck in the future," is the understatement of the year.

In fact, Watergate makes recurrence more probable, if we retain a political system which allows bad, devious power-hungry men to achieve power. What Watergate proved is that it is quite possible to get away with it, so long as you don't yourself manufacture and retain the damning evidence of your crimes. This is something no ordinary criminal would dream of doing, and it is a mistake that no future Presidential criminal would dream of repeating. What's so frightening about Watergate is that despite the hysteria, the public doesn't seem to understand that it points to some serious weaknesses in our system, and has given practically no thought to the reforms required to prevent a recurrence. Controls over the intelligence agencies can give only peripheral help on this matter.

Of NASA's Efforts for the Elderly

To the Editor:

John Keats wrote recently on your Op-Ed page about a modest NASA effort to provide meals for elderly people. In it, he managed to misunderstand just about every aspect of what we are doing, to put down the elderly and to rouse my ire in the process.

Some old people need help to get adequate food to eat. Congress has recognized this fact and has stimulated the sponsorship of group meals for them in various city centers. For the millions who cannot get to group meals, programs such as "Meals on Wheels" deliver hot food to the homebound. But if you live in a small town, or in the country, or need a hot meal on a weekend, "Meals on Wheels" can't help you. So the Texas Governor's Committee on Aging came to NASA and asked: Could we help develop good-tasting, easy-to-prepare, easy-to-deliver meals for people not reached by current programs?

Despite the fact that the Space Act of 1958 was a little vague on the point of NASA feeding the elderly, we said yes.

We can help because our food engineers know a little about packaging and shelf life, and we are working with agencies which know a lot about the kind of food people like to eat. To correct a few misapprehensions:

The food is commercially prepared, not "space food." Some of it is freeze-dried, like campers' food, and some is not. It's packaged in cans or pouches—many a squeeze-tube, no problem for "pained, arthritic fingers." It doesn't "require no preparation," but it's easy to prepare, using the recipient's own dishes and silverware. It will be up to the using agency whether to mail it or not; if it does (a week's worth at a time), it will arrive in good condition. The food has a two-year shelf life.

We care because we have relatives who are old, and because we'll be old ourselves soon—if we're lucky. And if packaged meals are the alternative to being put into a nursing home for the convenience of the government or our relatives, we'll make the obvious choice, even if the cuisine isn't up to Mr. Keats's continental standards.

People do need caring. When I flew, the chow was good, but the people who put it together for us were great—they were on our side, and they bustled their butts to do the job for us. Now they're trying to use their talents to do the job for old people. The technology is good, but it's the caring of which I am most proud.

Humphrey And Kennedy?

By Tom Wicker

ANGELES, May 30—Barring stunning reversal, California's ambitious Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. should win the biggest prize at this state's 280 delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

Frank Church, a Westroer Stanford man, should run well. But here is an example of how hard it is going to be for Jimmy Carter—Anybody But Carter?

California's delegates are split by Congressional districts. Of 43 of them. Any candidate must win a minimum 15 percent of the vote in any district to be eligible for a share of the delegates. Jimmy Carter could almost certainly win 15 percent of the vote in 15 of the 43 districts.

But Carter could do better than that. Jerry Brown's home-court advantage. And on the same day, he is favored to win a large share of the delegates. New Jersey delegates are challenged by Mr. Brown, Mr. Carter and Representative Morris K. Udall. At the end of the primary season, Mr. Carter should be able to win 200 to 1,300 delegates compared to Mr. Brown's 100 to 150 delegates.

Arithmetic is a major reason why an organized last-ditch ABC effort probably would be futile. It might be disastrous. If Mr. Brown or Mr. Church—or less probably Mr. Carter—who is not competing in California—could run so powerfully in all the primaries as to set up a bandwagon.

IN THE NATION

psychology for himself, that it is one thing. More plausible is the possibility that all three might agree only to slow Mr. Carter's momentum, without establishing any themselves as the principal challenger. That would open the door to the most likely alternative to Jimmy Carter—a Humphrey-Kennedy ticket.

Unpublished reports, routinely denied, suggested Kennedy's sudden availability, the well-leaked news of his assets for Mr. Carter, and Mr. Humphrey's elephantine hints on the occasion of their joint appearance in Minnesota that, if drafted for the Presidency, he would in turn draft Mr. Kennedy for the Vice Presidency, can be interpreted only one way. Unless Mr. Carter puts the nomination beyond reach in the primaries and in the case-trading before the convention, or unless one of his primary rivals develops supermomentum, the ABC movement will be spurred by the belief that to draft Mr. Humphrey also to draft Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. Carter, however, has two powerful arguments going for his nomination: that he has fought and won more primary battles than anyone either party, and is thus the nearest of the Democrats to a demonstrated popular choice; and that he has the likelihood of returning most of the South—perhaps even the so-called "Sunbelt"—to the Democratic fold without necessarily losing in the North as a consequence. Corollary to the latter argument is the clear regional base of the Carter campaign, giving him the nomination, after his many victories, is as certain as anything can be to deliver the South, most of the Sunbelt to a conservative Republican candidate—a short probably a long-term Democratic office of major proportions.

As for his primary opponents, Mr. Church has been unwilling to step aside to give Mr. Udall a clear one-on-one shot at Mr. Carter in Ohio. Mr. Brown has been unwilling to leave the Rhode Island challenge to Mr. Church. And Mr. Humphrey has allowed an uncommitted slate of delegates to endorse him as well as Mr. Brown. To credit, Mr. Udall has been willing to stay out of California.

But it is at least possible that the Brown-Church-Udall candidacies will give Mr. Carter enough to bring a serious Humphrey-Kennedy draft movement. That ticket has superficial appeal, since it would link the Democrats' two biggest names and most uncommitted campaigners. But even assuming Mr. Kennedy actually would accept the No. 2 spot, this ticket also has a few, perhaps fatal weaknesses.

Neither man has campaigned in the primaries. Their joint draft would create the supposed openness of the nominating process, and foreclose the fiction of an independent Presidential choice. Mr. Kennedy would have to renounce on his near-term statement that he is not available. Mr. Carter would be bumped from second place, despite his primary victories, with troublesome consequences in the South and elsewhere. Bossism and power politics could be handed to the Republicans on an issue. And three serious liabilities would be joined in one ticket—the reputations of both candidates as champions of precisely that "big Government in Washington" the public has been voting against; the possibility that Mr. Humphrey is vulnerable to charges of corruption from his past campaigns and associations; and the country's long memory of Edward Kennedy's performance at Chappaquiddick and the cover-up that followed.

SATELLITE BEACH, Fla.—Thank the good Lord for the Corps of Army Engineers, which has denied the huge Deltona Corporation dredge-and-fill permits needed for 4,300 additional canal homes on Marco Island, south of Tampa Bay. Let it be proclaimed throughout the land that left-leaning ecologists have a new champion.

Marco's Minions

$75 million. Now, thanks to the corps, they could resume cutting paper dolls.

Equally sinister was Deltona's plot to populate the 5,000 homes with affluent retired Northerners; of the 3,500 lots already sold for about $30 million, it is estimated that nearly 1,000 went to families unaccountably leaving that problems paradise called the New York City area.

Some say "Federal fiscal" experts (who understandably dislike any maneuver that might lower taxes) bristled on learning, Deltona was luring to Florida retirees without school-age children to be educated at a cost of 1,200 taxpayer dollars per child per year, and that they were peace-loving oldsters who seek sunshine, backyard boat anchorages and tranquility.

Meanwhile, Deltona-security owners view the impasse with mixed emotions. The prevailing hope is that a bountiful Uncle Sam, having prohibited Deltona from discharging contractual obligations, and having bailed out Lockheed and New York City, would lend a helping hand.

Less happy are the lot buyers, who tightened belts, put Florida dreams in cold storage and foresaw a merry scramble for refunds, with local lawyers getting rich. They seem angry enough to declare war on the Army. In effect, the corpsmen countermanded approval of the project by Gov. Reuben Askew and his cabinet. This left the Governor holding an ecological bear by the tail—unwilling to hold on but afraid to let go.

Old-time corpsmen were puzzled, happily recalling the decades they bulldozed a broad swath through the ecology, caring not a hoot for the owls they discommoded in digging deeper channels and straightening crooked waterways. They considered themselves the boatman's best friend; now, it would seem, they are his bitterest enemy.

Deltona president Frank E. Mackie expressed himself as being "shocked and outraged." He has appealed in Federal court.

His view is not shared by television's liberal newsmen, who saw the corps decision as "a landmark victory" for ecology. In fairness, let us note they're based in New York City, where life is so unburied, so abundant and so devoid of conflict one tends to forget the woes of others.

For them, we have glad tidings: Florida's alligator population has zoomed beyond three million. Unless oil slicks interfere, our surf teems with shark, barracuda and Portuguese men-of-war. Water snakes were never more plentiful.

So, fellows, whenever you can, come on down for a swim!

L'etat C'est Us

By Roger Wilkins

Ever since Life magazine published a photograph of Ted Sorensen walking up the path from the northwest gate to the White House in 1960 with a caploo quoting him as saying, "I will be concerned with the programs and the policies of President John F. Kennedy," other young men in other years have dreamed of making that walk and exercising that power for a President of their own. Today scores of such people are circling and serving the candidate of their choice, and a few of them will someday walk through the gate and settle into an office somewhere near the President's.

John D. Ehrlichman paused during a promotional tour for his new book to talk last week about his own trip to the West Wing and about the exercise of power once he got inside. The campaign of 1968 began for him in 1967 when he was invited to come to New York for a strategy session on the question of whether Richard Nixon should make another run for the Presidency. He says that though he was flattered to be included in those discussions and though he was somewhat bored with his growing law practice in Seattle, he had no ambitions in Washington or dreams about power.

"It came about step by step," he now recalls. "First they wanted me to handle the convention for them and I talked it over with my law partners and they agreed I ought to take the time to do that. Then, after the convention they asked me to be their tour guide, so I did that. After that it was scheduling. And finally, I was close enough to the candidate to protect him from some of his self-destructive tendencies. I guess he trusted me because he knew I intended to go back to Seattle and didn't want anything from him."

"Finally, in Florida, after the election, I rode up to Opa-Locka in the limousine with the President-elect and he asked me to be counsel in the White House for just one year. Greed took over then, I guess, since I could see that job enhancing my professional stature and, besides, I thought I could do some useful work on the problem of conflicts of interest in the Government. I said yes and a couple of days later I was unveiled as the President's counsel in front of a horde of newsmen and camera crews at transition headquarters at the Pierre.

"Then," Ehrlichman continued, "people started making things very comfortable for me. My doors were opened and my shirts were washed. On the third day at the Pierre, some guy from the C.I.A. showed up with reams of secret aerial photographs of the People's Republic of China. The Signal Corps showed up offering to install a bunch of color television sets in my house. Then all of a sudden I was involved in picking the President's Cabinet. There's no way to prepare for that kind of responsibility. People just assumed I knew things I didn't know. It was more than culture shock. It was almost a physical thing. With all those angel wings bearing you up and offering indisputable proof of your greatness, it's not hard to believe that you're something special."

Inside the White House, it was a different world. In retrospect Ehrlichman thinks that there was prophetic symbolism in the fact that his office, tucked away on the third floor of the West Wing, afforded no view of the outside world or the people who inhabited it. "We didn't have to go outside the building for lunch, so when we sat around talking economic policy, we didn't even know what the price of a hamburger was."

Working there was different from anything Ehrlichman had ever known. "It's not like working at G.M.," he said, "it's more like going to work for Howard Hughes." Everything is focused on the President. If he wants to talk about baseball all afternoon, then a busy assistant misses appointments, lets his work go and talks about baseball. Since the President's attention is the source of all power, there is intense competition for it. And in the Nixon years at least, bearers of bad tidings and those who insisted on disagreeing with the President's view of things did poorly in that competition. There were few brave or foolish enough to challenge the President's view of reality. On the contrary, there was a strong tendency to reinforce his illusions about himself and everything else.

Despite what he has seen, this man who became one of the most powerful of all Americans under Richard Nixon harbors few doubts about the amount of power accumulated in the White House. He thinks it is good for the country. "The magic of the place," he says, "is the President's ability to mobilize action." And he thinks that at least for the foreseeable future, Presidents, as a result of Watergate, will be more open and less illusion-bound.

When asked about what to look for in picking a President, Ehrlichman is a bit less optimistic because he thinks that the process by which Americans select Presidents eliminates a lot of the people with attributes necessary to handle such power and that it stifles those attributes in the people who choose to stay in the race. And the quality that this man who has been there puts first is "the human sensitivity for the ordinary day-to-day thoughts, worries, concerns and joys of the plainest citizens in the land."

The Devil With the Dictionary

By Russell Baker

Entries taken at random from the 1976 edition of "The Modern Political Dictionary":

Congress, 1. Anatomy. A stately body with an expensive taste for stately bodies. 2. Zoology. A political organism whose distinguishing peculiarity is its inability to move faster than a glacier's crawl although its 535 separate parts are constantly running. 3. Financial. An institution devoted to the preservation of the taxpayer's dollar by using it only for enriching the constituents of the institution's most influential members.

taxpayer's dollar. 1. Archaic. An antique unit of currency which became extinct during the 1930's; it has been replaced by the taxpayer's blood, but this term is never used in politics because of politicians' delicate sensibilities. 2. Interjection. A political hunting noise (cf. "Yoicks") commonly uttered by campaigning politicians at a loss for words which will conceal their intent but eager to convey solicitude for their putative victims.

presidential campaigners. The unsupportable in pursuit of the indifferent.

Democrat. 1. Psychiatry. A person suffering from the delusion that several thousand people who disagree violently with each other can, by getting elected, restore humanity to the Garden of Eden. 2. History. Any member of an assortment of warring sects which are held together by the philosophical conviction that warring sects which do not hang together on Election Day will not have any Federal judgeships with which to reward themselves during the following four years.

New York Democrat. A person in danger of indictment.

Watergate. An archaic vulgarism (cf. Vietnam) never uttered in the presence of voters lest they be offended by the implication that history began before last January.

Republican. 1. Noun. Member of a small sect whose adherents worship the principle that the only people fit to lead them are those who would rather be right-wing than President. 2. Adjective. Describing a state of mind induced by repeating bumping of the head on helicopter doors and other myriofield projections.

Panama Canal. An ancient and incommensurable tropical ditch, too small for the passage of the larger aircraft carriers and all tankers, but more than ample for the intentment of the Republican Party.

hunger for new faces. Political jargon pertaining to a widely perceived public urge to place its most difficult problems in inexperienced hands. Thus, e.g., a voter who insists that his gall bladder be removed by a freshman medical student instead of a hospital chief-of-surgery, is said to have a "hunger for new faces."

CAN TWO DOCTORS BE CHEAPER THAN ONE?

Getting a second opinion on elective surgery may save money. We have a new program that offers a free second opinion by a certified specialist in cases of elective—non-emergency—surgery.

We've made this benefit available to all "experience-rated" groups of subscribers.

A recent study cited by Congress reported that in 17.6% of the cases surveyed, a second specialist, when consulted, disagreed with an original opinion that favored surgery.

That could save a lot of surgery. And a lot of money.

We at Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York are giving the idea a full-scale trial to see if indeed the second opinion will help us control costs.

Also, we see this second opinion as improving the quality of care being administered.

More than costs alone are at stake. The patient is saved the surgery and also the worry.

And, in the case of the second specialist agreeing, the patient would be greatly reassured.

But savings in tests, surgery and hospital time could be considerable under this program, and better use of resources should result.

We're trying to eliminate unnecessary operations. Eliminating all of them may be too big a task.

Some doctors have estimated that many tonsilectomies performed on children in this country may be unnecessary. And that's only one example.

Ending even a majority of these operations is obviously a huge endeavor. But it's worth the effort.

There are lives as well as monies to consider, and the beneficial effect on the patient's decision-making.

Our new program may be an answer to improving the quality of care, the use of facilities, the patient's peace of mind, and the cost situation.

We're offering this program at no initial cost. We'd like it to be as widely accepted as possible. And if the results are favorable, we hope to extend it to all groups, not just the experience-rated.

We call our program by the acronym of PRESSO (Program for Elective Surgical Second Opinion).

It's the latest of our many efforts to contain costs and improve the quality of health care.

If you're a member of an eligible Blue Cross and Blue Shield group, ask your employer or group administrator about PRESSO. If you're an employer, ask us.

We believe there's more to good health than just paying bills.

to name American the No. 1 domestic airline.

"If you were traveling to any destination in the U.S., and had your choice of any U.S. airline, which airline would you choose—and why?"

The Airline Passengers Association asked that question of 15,000 of its members, people who averaged more than 35 flights a year.

The results were conclusive: more people chose American

And the reasons were many: schedules, reliability, comfort, courtesy, convenience—and most of all, service.

Being named number one underscores our right to say, "We're American Airlines. Doing what we do best."

For Young Urban Nomads, Home Is the Streets

By GEORGE VECSEY

The New York Times/Charles H. Johnson

Teen-agers in the doorway of their so-called clubhouse in an abandoned building in the South Bronx. At a shelter of the Group Live-In Experience, below, such youngsters are given chance to develop along normal lines, aided by trained social workers.

You couldn't see Rosa at first. She was sitting in the shadows, behind the three motorcycles, in the back of the gang's clubhouse. When the gang leader nodded, she told her story to a sympathetic social worker.

Rosa's story is a classic among New York City's youthful runaways. Her stepfather had abused her and her mother had not believed her. And so she had hit the streets, at the age of 15—not for the thrills of the open road but for the escape.

New York City has thousands of these youthful nomads—children who have no homes or children who run away from home. The Community Service Society, which is currently conducting a survey of the problem in the Bronx, estimates there may be 15,000 children on the loose. Social workers say that more children are hitting the streets as families and individuals become more fragmented.

What happened when a child of 9 or an almost-adult of 17 no longer lives at home? Moderately, Lucky. Rosa was moderately lucky. A gang with a reputation for fighting has sheltered her in its clubhouse without mistreating her. They share their meager food with her; they have parties; they ride motorcycles; they protect their turf, the days and nights go-by in a blur. But she has a painful infection and is not comfortable living off the gang's generosity.

Other children are not so fortunate as Rosa because the worst evils of the city are waiting to destroy them. It may seem like an adventure at first—the way it did for Danielle when she left her family at the age of 10, "because something happened," as she puts it. At first, Danielle slept in the abandoned buildings that exist all over the Bronx—no plumbing, no heat, sometimes no windows or doors—which harbor fugitives from the law and from their own families.

Children decorate these buildings with scraps of curtain and soda boxes or any better furniture they can find. They sleep "with The Daily News for a sheet, The New York Post for a pillow and The New York Times for a blanket," as one man put it.

Rhythm of the Street

For Danielle and other runaways, there is usually something to do. It may not sound like much to the organized middle-class mind, but it is the rhythm of the street—hanging around, music from transistor radios, fighting, begging or stealing, and "getting high all the time, just getting high," as Danielle says.

Like many other runaways, Danielle stayed in her home area because shopkeepers gave her a little credit or sometimes free food. It was a community that was not shocked to see an adolescent child in shabby clothing standing around on the street in the middle of the night wandering into abandoned buildings.

She went to work, entertaining men in the abandoned buildings. At the age of 11 or 12, determined she told a social worker—"to be a better whore than my mother." She kept that up until the police sent her to an agency for children. She is now 13 and living in a children's home, and grows restless when she talks of her time on the street.

"I miss it, to tell you the truth," she says. "I wasn't so bad. I knew what I was doing."

Girls Most Vulnerable

Social workers say that girls are most vulnerable; but boys also learn in their early teens that they can make money as "chicken-hawks," as young male prostitutes are known on 42d Street. One social worker says she often find one of her charges in that area.

Not all runaways drift into vice and crime. Some find the street less chaotic than the home they left, the gang more protection than the family they left behind. They spend all day in a friendly shop or out of doors, waiting and watching for something to happen.

"It's the American pioneer spirit still alive," says Lorraine Reilly, a Roman Catholic nun who runs four shelters in the Bronx. "This country hasn't developed a system to take care of our own. Whatever things get bad, you hit the road."

Running away in America has been vastly overrated, Sister Lorraine insists. "We think of Tom Sawyer attending his own funeral, Toby Ty-Junior high school students from East Lyme, Conn., studying fish caught in Thames River.

By ARI L. GOLDMAN

Special to The New York Times GROTTON, Conn.—When Dr. Howard Weiss was in high school, he recalled the other day, "The teacher said, 'Bio: life: logy: study. Biology: the study of life.' We were shown lots of plastic models and preserved dead creatures, but we never saw a living thing the whole year."

Dr. Weiss is now the director of Project Oceanology here, and each year he not only shows more than 7,000 Connecticut junior and senior high school students "living things, but he also shows them where the creatures live. He takes the youngsters out to sea on a 50-foot Navy surplus launch called Enviro-Lab in a program financed by 14 southern Connecticut school systems. The point of the sea outings is to put a little life back into biology and to show young people the perils that some of that life faces.

Projected Oceanology is one of an estimated 2,000 courses in environmental education for precollege youngsters that in recent years have sprung up around the country almost as fast as offshore oil drills. Based principally on coastal states (although several landlocked states have courses along their rivers and streams), the classes seek to show the effect of oil slicks, untreated sewage and industrial pollution on wildlife.

"Many of these youngsters will live here, work here, vote here and make decisions that will affect the marine environment," Dr. Weiss said. "We want them to know what is at stake." Project Oceanology was started in 1973 by a $59,000 grant from the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. In subsequent years, the Federal share was reduced, and the local school systems began to absorb the costs. By last September, the 14 school boards had taken over the entire budget, which is up to $74,000.

Other secondary school programs in marine sciences have slackened off after the Federal money was withdrawn. Other programs have faltered because of sagging local school budgets. Sheepshead Bay High School in Brooklyn, for example, can no longer afford to rent boats for its oceanography class, so the students go to the New York Aquarium in Coney Island to examine marine life. Beach Channel High School in Queens has also cut out the use of the large marine support vessels, and so its students go out to Jamaica Bay in inflatable dinghies.

But each day in Grotton, just a ferryboat ride away from the fiscal woes of New York City, students from the local junior and senior high schools board a 50-foot former Navy launch for a firsthand look at the marine environment of Long Island Sound.

Coastline Offers Lessons

When a boatful of eighth-graders pulled out from a berth at Avery Point the other day, one of the first lessons they learned was that although their coastline is removed from the great industrial centers, it is not alien to the pollution that is often associated with the big cities. As the Enviro-Lab turned up the Thames River, it passed a chemical company, a power plant, the Grotton Sewage Treatment Plant, as well as a lobster farm and beach and boating facilities.

The boat stopped along the way and a mechanical shovel dropped 30 feet to the river bottom. What came up was a smelly, thick, black mud substance. The students from the East Lyme School District examined the substance with procedures they had learned in the classroom before their voyage. They found heavy concentrations of metals (mercury and copper), oil and other pollutants, but no life, only two dead clams.

Fish Are Studied

Their on-board instructor, Thomas McLoughlin, picked up a male flounder and a female flounder that the youngsters had netted from the sea, and showed them the sperm and the eggs. The youngsters then proceeded to identify the fish by examining their fins, scales, teeth, color and shape. Their experiments completed, they gently dropped the fish back into the river.

Mr. McLoughlin kept a few flounder on board for what might be regarded as the biology lesson of the day. He dissected a flounder and explained the functions of the various organs. Finally Mr. McLoughlin filleted the fish. "We're all part of the food chain," he said. "Every time you eat something, something else dies, be it animals, fish or plants. When your mother buys fish, it may come in a plastic tray, but this is what happens to it before it gets there." His demonstration completed, Mr. McLoughlin was asked by one boy what he was going to do with the flounder. "Oh," he replied, "I throw it away. I don't eat fish."

"It was terrible, very hard. But even with the hardship I would go through it all again just for the sight of the American paratroopers dropping into here." The Major Events of the Day

International

Syria said yesterday that it had intervened in northern Lebanon to stop the fighting around beleaguered Christian villages near the Syrian border that had been heavily shelled for several days. It was reported that the fighting had ended. Radio Damascus said that Syrian "delegates" went there in response to requests by local residents. Meanwhile, leftist Lebanese and Palestinian sources in Beirut charged that Syria had increased the number of its troops in Lebanon over the weekend, but the reports could not be confirmed. (Page 1, Column 5.)

The White House announced that President Ford was planning an economic meeting with six other nations this summer and it was reported that the meeting was likely to take place after the last state primaries on June 8 and before the mid-August Republican National Convention. The six nations are those that participated with the United States in the economic meeting at Rambouillet, France, last November, and Canada. [1:4-1]

Six months after Surinam was declared independent of the Netherlands, the northeastern South American country is trying desperately to woo back the one-third of its population—160,000 people—that had been among Surinam's most skilled, educated and wealthy. They had fled rather than face independence. Their loss has been felt economically at home. To induce them to return, the Dutch Government has offered Surinam $1.5 billion in development aid over the next decade. But neither entreaties from their homeland nor the promise of aid from the Dutch has had any effect. [1:4-5.]

Reports that Rockefeller University in New York has found a way to culture the most lethal form of malaria parasite—using human blood as the growth medium—have raised hopes at the World Health Organization in Geneva that the long-sought malaria vaccine may be near. The Rockefeller University discovery, by Dr. William Trager, is said to be similar to the discovery by John F. Enders of a way to culture polio viruses in monkey kidney tissue, which led to the development of polio vaccine. [1:6-8.]

National

On the eve of primaries in South Dakota, Montana and Rhode Island, Jimmy Carter, Senator Frank Church and Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. California concentrated their campaigning in Rhode Island. The three rival Democrats swept through the state and at one time they and their entourage were elbowing one another as they arrived together, followed by supporters, at a hotel in Cranston, where they participated in a Memorial Day parade. [1:1.]

Martha Mitchell, the outspoken estranged wife of John N. Mitchell, who was Attorney General in the Nixon Administration, died at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York of multiple myeloma, a rare malignancy of the bone marrow. She was 57 years old. Her husband was one of four Nixon Administration officials convicted in 1975 on all counts in the Watergate coverup trial. It was not unusual for Mrs. Mitchell to telephone a reporter late at night to tell what was on her mind. She had mistaken that "somebody" was trying to make her husband "the goat" in the Watergate scandal. None of her family was present at her death. [1:2-3.]

If present birth trends continue, according to a new Census Bureau report, about 17 percent of the country's population will be 65 or older by the year 2030, compared with 10.5 percent now. The report indicates that as the country's elderly population grows and women continue to outlive men, there will be more educated, widowed older women than ever before. Women, the report found, are outliving men by an average of almost eight years. [1:6-7.]

Metropolitan

New York City, which has offered a free college education to its residents since 1847, is expected to bow to fiscal pressures and charge tuition in the colleges of the City University system by a vote tonight of a reluctant Board of Higher Education. The expected vote would prepare the way for approval by the Legislature of a fiscal package that would make possible the reopening of the public colleges, which were shut down on Friday, and would carry them through the next academic year. [1:3.]

The city has committed $3.5 million of its own funds to reconstruct a four-block dilapidated section of the Henry Hudson Parkway along Riverside Park at the 96th Street interchange. The work, expected to start in August or September and take 18 months, is the second of two major rebuilding projects to get the parkway back into shape. [1:7.]

Pentagon Relaxes Security to Permit Bicentennial Visits

The Washington Star

WASHINGTON, May 31—In a lack of fanfare, the Pentagon has relaxed its security for the first time in four years to let Bicentennial tourists visit the famous office building.

About 200 visitors a day are being accommodated, and Pentagon officials expect about 700 a day when word of the new policy becomes public knowledge. Until 1972, passes were technically required for visits, but checking was apt to be lax. Then came the peace demonstrations and a bomb scare. Security was tightened and only a mezzanine shopping concourse was left easily accessible to the public.

Now, in honor of the Bicentennial, the Pentagon has been opened—not to casual strollers, but to guided tour groups of 30, mostly arranged in advance. Most of the tour-takers arrive in buses at the concourse assembly area, but a number of parking places have been provided. There are signs indicating Bicentennial parking, and rows painted on the sidewalk lead visitors to the Pentagon. The tours, spaced 15 minutes apart from 9 A.M. to 3:15 P.M. weekdays, include a 10-minute tour on the history of the 33-year-old building and a 20-minute walk through the Hall of Heroes and corridors specially decorated with paintings, photographs and models. The tours end through two of the building's five above-ground floors. Members of tour groups are subjected to security checks of handbags and parcels, and cameras must be left at the assembly area.

Arrangements for the tours may be made by calling 895-7778. There is usually room for only about 10 walk-ins on any tour group, an official said.

Jacques Monod, Nobel Biologist, Dies; Thought Existence Is Based on Chance

By FRANK J. PRIAL. Jacques Monod, the Nobel Prize-winning French biologist and director of the Pasteur Institute in Paris, died yesterday at his home in Cannes, France. He was 66 years old. Dr. Monod shared the 1965 Nobel award for medicine and physiology with two colleagues at the Pasteur Institute, Francois Jacob and Andre Lwoff, for research on the workings of the living cell.

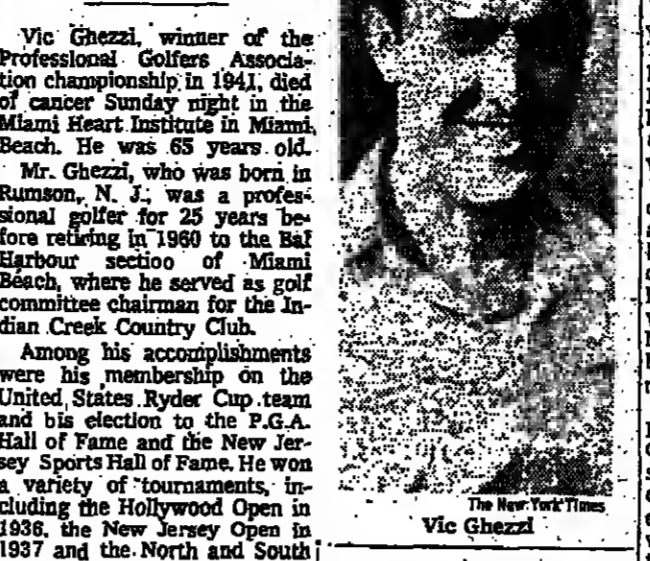

He was probably best known for his book-length essay, "Chance and Necessity," published in 1970. In it he postulated a chilling conviction that all existence is because of chance and that mankind's inevitable recognition of this fact will necessitate a complete revolution in human thought. "Chance alone is at the source of all novelty, all creation in the biosphere," he wrote. "Pure chance, only chance, absolute but blind liberty is at the root of the prodigious edifice that is evolution."

Although he flirted briefly with Communism during World War II, he was as harsh on Marxist dictators as on what he called the "disgusting farago of Judeo-Christian religiosity." "Postulate of Objectivity" "What I have tried to show," Dr. Monod told an interviewer in 1971, "is that the scientific attitude implies what I call the postulate of objectivity—that is to say, the fundamental postulate that there is no plan, that there is no intention in the universe."

"Now this," he went on, "is basically in accord with virtually all the religious or metaphysical systems whatever, all of which try to show that there is some sort of harmony between man and the universe and that man is a product—predictable if not indispensable—of the evolution of the universe. "One of the great problems of philosophy," Dr. Monod said, "is the relationship between the realm of knowledge and the realm of values. Knowledge is what is; values are what ought to be."

Vic Ghezzi, Golfer, Dead at 65; Won P.G.A. Championship '41

The New York Times Vic Ghezzi

Vic Ghezzi, winner of the Professional Golfers' Association championship in 1941, died of cancer Sunday night in the Miami Heart Institute in Miami Beach. He was 65 years old. Mr. Ghezzi, who was born in Rumson, N. J., was a professional golfer for 25 years before retiring in 1960 to the Bal Harbour section of Miami Beach, where he served as golf committee chairman for the Indian Creek Country Club.

Among his accomplishments were his membership on the United States Ryder Cup team and his election to the P.G.A. Hall of Fame of the New Jersey Sports Hall of Fame. He won a variety of tournaments, including the Hollywood Open in 1936, the New Jersey Open in 1937 and the North and South tournament in 1938. His most memorable moment, however, came in the P.G.A. and the United States Open championships.

Winner Over Nelson In 1941, he won the P.G.A. in by beating Byron Nelson in a two-hole playoff after both men had tied after the final 36-hole round. Ghezzi won the $1,100 first prize by sinking a 30-inch putt on the 38th hole after Nelson had missed a putt of almost identical length.

After winning what was to be the only major championship of his career, Ghezzi said: "I won against one of the finest golf players we've ever had. I feel like a kid on Christmas morning." Five years later, at the U.S. Open in Cleveland, Ghezzi was to feel like a kid on Christmas morning who had not received any gifts, as he lost in a three-way playoff for the championship. Ghezzi, Nelson and Lloyd Mangrum had all tied through the regulation four rounds of play, with 4-under-par scores of 284. Then they engaged in an 18-hole playoff and came up tied again.

ANNE REID, EX-AIDE TO ROCKEFELLERS

Special to The New York Times GREENWICH, Conn., May 31—Anne de Ballet-Latour Reid, wife of Fergus Reid 3d, an investment adviser to the Rockefeller family, died suddenly in Concord, N. H., Sunday. She was 50 years old and lived at 12 Glenwood Drive in Greenwich.

Mrs. Reid had attended her husband's 25th reunion at St. Paul's School in Concord, N.H., in 1954. She was a former president of Roosevelt and Son, an investment banking house. Mrs. Reid was the daughter of Marianne Dunn of New York and the late Count Guy de Ballet-Latour. She was the granddaughter of ambassador and Mrs. James C. Dunn, with whom she lived for many years. Mr. Dunn was American ambassador to Paris, Rio de Janeiro, Madrid and Rome.

Survivors also include three children, Mary Armour, Fergus and Brooke, and a sister Elizabeth Adams of Paris. ADM. HERBERT RAYNER OTTAWA, May 31 (AP)—Vice Admiral Herbert S. Rayner, former Canadian Chief of Naval Staff, died of leukemia in a hospital here last night. He was 65 years old. During World War II, Admiral Rayner commanded the destroyer in the Battle of the Atlantic, on the convoy route to North Russia and in the English Channel and the Bay of Biscay. He was appointed Chief of Naval Staff in 1960 and retired in 1964.

description of the Cecchetti method of instruction. Enrico Cecchetti had been the ballet master of the Diaghilev Company and, with Mr. Beaumont, was cofounder of the Cecchetti Society in 1922. The organization became a part of the Imperial Society of Teachers of Dancing, of which Mr. Beaumont later became the chairman.

His studies of dancers and choreographers included memoirs of Michael Fokine, Anna Pavlova, and the 19th-century Austrian ballerina Fanny Elssler. His company histories covered the Montecarlo Russian Ballet, the Vic-Wells Ballet and the Sadler's Wells Ballet (now the Royal Ballet). His translations from the French included the "Letters on Dancing and Ballets" by Noverre and "The Romantic Ballet as seen by Theophile Gautier."

During the 20's and 30's Mr. Beaumont wrote articles for "Dancing World" and "Dance Journal" and during the late 40's for "Ballet." His collected criticism was gathered in the volume "Dancers Under My Lens." He was critic of The Sunday Times from 1950 to 1958. Mr. Beaumont's memoirs, "The Ballet and the Ballet," published in 1974, brought his total output to more than 60 volumes. His honors included the Legion d'Honneur (1950) and the Order of the British Empire (1952).

DR. MAYER E. ROSS

Dr. Mayer E. Ross, a general surgeon, died Sunday at Caledonian Hospital in Brooklyn. He was 75 years old and a resident of Brooklyn. A graduate of Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons, Dr. Ross was consultant in peripheral vascular surgery at Kingsbrook Jewish Medical Center. He had been president of the medical board of that institution when it was known as the Jewish Chronic Disease Hospital. He was also associate surgeon emeritus at Caledonian and a past president of the New York State Society of Surgeons. He was a founding member of the Brooklyn Doctors Symphony Orchestra, to which he played violin. He leaves his wife, the former Lillian Schacter, a son, Richard; a daughter, Wendy; a brother, Lazarus, and two sisters, Nell Markwitz and Isabel Ross.

Veterans Celebrate the Holiday by Remembering to honor of Memorial Day, 100 New York veterans marched up Riverside Drive, laid a wreath of red and white carnations at the Soldiers and Sailors Monument, sang "God Bless America" and listened to a speech proclaiming that "to be remem- bered is never to have died; to be forgotten is never to have lived." A crowd of sev- eral hundred was on hand at the monument, at 89th Street, to listen to that speech by Nicholas Van Eck of the United War Veterans and to hear band music.

Staff Cutbacks at Legal Aid Society Force Reduction in Services By BARBARA CAMPBELL Juan Vega stood before the tide window with the sliding plastic doors and showed Dorothy Faye evidence of his grievance. There was a tip in the right sleeve of his coat. Underneath, there were dog's teeth marks on his arm and he wanted to sue. Mrs. Faye has sat at her receptionist's desk by the admittance window for 23 years at the Legal Aid Society's civil law division. In that time, she has heard a lot of stories. Most of them were sad, she said, some of them were "just plain horrible" and a few, a very few, were amusing.

Dorothy Faye has for 23 years served at the admittance window at the Legal Aid Society.

But she treats the constant stream of troubled humanity with dignity. They come to the office, she knows, because they cannot afford a lawyer. They are in trouble and need help. Five days a week, beginning at 8 A.M., Mrs. Faye, whose official title is receptionist but whose enthu- siastically assumed avocation is counselor, advocate, referral agent, psychologist and friend, handles her job adroitly. Questions and Advice She did not refer Mr. Vega to an attorney immediately. She first asked a few questions: "Was the dog off the leash?" "Yes." "Do you know who owns the dog?" "No, he's just a dog around the neighborhood but he got a collar." Mrs. Faye gave Mr. Vega some advice. You must find out, my friend, who owns the dog," she said. "If you don't find out, no one can help you. A summons has to be served, and how can you serve a summons if you don't know whose dog it is?" Clerical Workers Laid Off She did not let Mr. Vega go away with nothing. He had visited the Legal Aid offices expecting some action. She gave him the name of a bar association that could recommend a lawyer if Mr. Vega did find the dog's owner. The Legal Aid Society cannot sue in behalf of its clients in civil division cases. Mr. Vega smiled. He was going to try. And Mrs. Faye said, just before he turned from her window to leave the fifth-floor offices at 11 Park Place, "Did you get shots for that bite, darling? It could be very bad for you if you didn't." "Oh, yeah, I got those right away," he said. She was satisfied.

we don't get a lunch hour, there is so much work to do. We are understaffed, overburdened and it hurts the people who come here." Eve Plotkin, attorney in charge at the society, said that volunteers were needed as typists, file clerks and bilingual interviewers to help Mrs. Faye and other em- ployees of the society. Because of the shortage, she said lawyers were avail- able only on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, but that the society had a special volunteer program for attorneys and does not owe new lawyers. 'Best of Luck' Meanwhile, Mrs. Faye had to put aside her agitation. People were waiting quietly in a nearby room. The phone rang. "Here's a gentleman on the phone," she told Mrs. Plotkin. "He wants to get back to Vermont To Learn More If you would like to volunteer to type, do filing, clerical work or bilingual-intake work, contact Eve Plotkin, 577-3346. but he can't cash a Government check. He says he's got proof of his identification but no bank will touch it."

Mrs. Plotkin suggested a check-cashing service, and Mrs. Faye told the caller, "O.K., darling, best of luck." An elderly woman was in tears. She told Mrs. Faye that she had befriended a friend of her dead son and lent him more than $1,000. Now, he wouldn't pay it back, the woman said. "He say now, I don't know you, lady," the woman said in halting English. "Before he used to call me mother." Mrs. Faye spoke to her a little bit in German; they seemed to communicate. "She says he is blackmailing her now, and she doesn't have much money left," Mrs. Faye said. She is afraid he will make trouble for her family in Latvia, she added. The man with the Government check called back. "No luck, darling!" Mrs. Faye asked. "You know it might be because they are afraid you stole somebody's wallet with I.D. I tell you what, try the Travelers Aid Society." "Hey," she said to the man, "how come you here with only that check? Oh, you got some from Europe. Now you're broke. See what happens. Best of luck, dar- ling. Try the Travelers Aid Society."

WEAVER Jr. (New York Times) ON, May 31 (The Federal Election Commission, which regulates the way in which candidates for office spend money, is expected to announce a new code of ethics for members of Congress. The code is expected to be more stringent than the one that was adopted in 1974. It is expected to cover such matters as the disclosure of financial interests, the acceptance of gifts, and the use of campaign funds. The code is expected to be a landmark in the history of campaign finance reform.

McGovern Drops 2 Staff Aides Active in a Stop-Carter Move

WASHINGTON, May 31 (UPI) — Senator George McGovern dismissed two of his staff aides for "becoming publicly involved" in a reported movement among Democrats to stop Jimmy Carter from winning the party's Presidential nomination. The dismissal followed a New York Times article yesterday in which Jack Quinn and Alan Baron were identified as being among leaders of a "loose and shifting alliance" of people opposing Mr. Carter's nomination. The South Dakota Senator and 1972 Democratic Presidential nominee said in a statement released by his office that he had requested the resignations from Mr. Baron and Mr. Quinn despite what he termed Mr. Carter's part in a "destructive stop-McGovern movement four years ago."

"I want no part of any such effort in 1976," said Mr. McGovern, who has already endorsed Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona for the Democratic nomination. He promised today to shift his support to Mr. Carter if the former Georgia Governor won the nomination.

Mr. Baron and Mr. Quinn said after they were dismissed that Mr. McGovern "has told us he was under intense pressure because of our political activities."

Two Aides Reply

"It is regrettable," they said, "that Governor Carter and his supporters have found our dissent and our principles so dangerous that they felt compelled to bring this pressure."

Mr. Carter, reached in Brook Park, Ohio, on his way to a campaign date in South Dakota, praised Mr. McGovern for his decision.

"It's important for a United States senator to have good political judgment, and I am sure that Senator McGovern decided that these two staff mem-

Ohio Vote Viewed as Vital In Carter-Udall Contest

By R. W. APPLE JR.
Special to The New York Times

COLUMBUS, Ohio, May 31—They're going to stop Jimmy Carter, this is the place to do it.

If Mr. Carter can win the Ohio primary a week from tomorrow by a substantial margin, taking more than 100 of the state's 152 Democratic convention delegates, he will almost certainly be too close to the 1,505 needed for nomination for the party to deny him the prize he is seeking.

Keeping the former Georgia Governor from doing so is the self-designated task of Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona, who has finished second in so many primaries (seven) that he is using "Second Hand Rose" as his theme song.

Here as in Michigan, he starts his effort from far behind, as much as 25 points in some polls. In Michigan he closed a 33-point gap only to lose to Mr. Carter by a few thousand votes.

Mr. Udall has promised to his fuzziest on the issues, to "hold his feet to the fire." Already, television commercials showing a two-faced Mr. Carter are on the air in Ohio, as well as new radio commercials comparing him to a carnival confidence man playing the shell game.

Backed by Labor

In one respect, Mr. Udall has an advantage here that he lacks in the Michigan voting on May 18. In that state, organized labor was arrayed almost solidly against him; here, he enjoys the backing of the liberal-labor coalition in nine northern Ohio Congressional districts.

But the lanky Arizona faces a number of difficulties here that he did not encounter in Michigan, difficulties serious enough to make him even more of an underdog than he was two weeks ago. Among them are the following:

Mr. Udall, who had sought a one-on-one contest in Ohio like the one in Michigan, was unable to dissuade Senator Frank Church of Idaho from campaigning here. Mr. Church is starting late and seems likely to finish third, but most of the votes he will win will probably come from Mr. Udall.

Cross-over voting, which is difficult under Ohio law, is likely to benefit Mr. Udall as it did in Michigan, where many conservative Democrats and moderate independents voted in the Republican race, leaving a more liberal Democratic electorate. The contest between Ronald Reagan, and President Ford in Ohio is not as heated as in Michigan.

By almost any standard, Ohio is a less liberal state than Michigan; it lacks a well-defined liberal community, if G. Mennen Williams and George W. Romney are the dominant figures of postwar politics in Michigan, Frank J. Lausche and James A. Rhodes are the comparable figures here.

Mr. Udall was able to concentrate on Michigan for three weeks while Mr. Carter was busy elsewhere. He will have only a little more than a week to campaign here.

Nonetheless, Mark Shields, the roly-poly campaign consultant who has moved into Ohio to oversee the Udall thrust, believes that his candidate has a chance to win.

Finds Lead Is Thin

"Carter's got a big, big lead," Mr. Shields conceded in an interview yesterday. "But it's as thin as cotton candy. We're going to show people that cotton candy is unhealthy; it gives you cavities."

Ohio elects 38 of its delegates at large and 114 by Congressional district. Mr. Shields's plan is to concentrate on north-eastern Ohio, which has more than half of the statewide vote and just less than half of the delegates chosen by district.

Mr. Carter, most politicians agree will have relatively few problems in southern Ohio, whose voting patterns have much in common with his own native region.

The Georgian has not been particularly successful with voters of Central and Eastern Ohio, because he is ofended by the Cosmo wards of Cleveland. He has been successful with blacks, who make up the other major voting bloc in the city, but he may do less well among Cleveland blacks than expected, because he offended Representative Louis Stokes and other powerful black leaders by challenging Mr. Stokes's favorite-son candidacy in his own Congressional district.

For the at-large delegates, who will be awarded on a proportional basis to states with more than 15 percent of the vote, Mr. Udall will have to compete not only with Mr. Carter and Mr. Church but also with the inactive candidacies of Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama and Senator Henry M.

READY, SET, GO! James (Chip) Carter, son of the former Georgia Governor, is competitor in the annual Memorial Day tri-cycle race, a San Francisco fund-raising event for guide dogs for the blind. His friends take advantage of the occasion to indulge in some political campaigning.

Jackson of Washington and the favorite-daughter slate headed by Gertrude Donahay, the state treasurer. The Donahay slate includes most of the state's prominent Democrats, but it is considered unlikely to reach the 15 percent minimum.

Mr. Carter tried and failed last Wednesday night to win the support of the Donahay group, another sign that many professionals consider his campaign beleaguered.

The Udall headquarters in Cleveland, the bunker for the last stand against Mr. Carter, is staffed by veterans of many second-place finishes: Paul Tully, the manager in Massachusetts and New York; Robert Bedard, the manager in Wisconsin; David Evans, the manager in New Hampshire.

Curt Mead, a partner of John Martilla, one national campaign manager who quit, is working as a volunteer; Jack Quinn, another national campaign manager who left, was in the office yesterday pecking out a new radio commercial.

Mr. Carter's campaign manager is Ted Celeste, brother of Lieut. Gov. Richard Celeste, probably the state's most promising young Democratic politician. The campaign headquarters has been open since March, and Mr. Celeste has an office in every one of the 23 Congressional districts.

Armed with new Federal patching funds, the Georgian will probably outspend Mr. Udall 2 to 1 for television, but Mr. Celeste said he was unable to gauge whether the negative impact of the Udall advertising could be neutralized.

Mr. Church's campaign began only 10 days ago, and the furniture has still not been delivered to his Columbus headquarters. Workers were sitting on the floor today.

Jerry Brady, the campaign manager, said he saw only a slim chance of a victory for Mr. Church, largely because, in a state with eight news media markets and no statewide newspapers, it will be impossible for the Idaho Senator to make himself known quickly.

"This state is eight New Jerseys and six Oregon," he said, referring to two smaller states where Mr. Church scored upset victories.

Notes on People Spanish Monarchs Visiting U.S. Today

Christopher Columbus represented Spain when he claimed the New World almost 500 years ago, but King Juan Carlos I and Queen Sofia yesterday became the first reigning Spanish monarchs to visit the Western Hemisphere. Following by plane the path of Columbus's ocean voyage, the royal couple stopped for a 30-hour visit in Santo Domingo, the Dominican Republic, where the explorer landed and where his remains are believed to be buried.

Today, the King and Queen will leave that city, once a Spanish colonial capital, for a four-day Bicentennial visit to the United States. Just Carlos plans to meet with President Ford tomorrow and will address a joint session of Congress on his plans for reforming the Spanish Government. On Thursday, he and Queen Sofia will visit New York City.

A statement made by Happy Rockefeller in a newspaper interview may not make her husband Nelson happy. He never will be President, she said, "unless someone waves a magic wand." Explaining that "elements of the [Republican] party are against the death of Nelson," she added that she thinks it is a "tragedy for the country that mediocrity be allowed to control some things."

Explaining that he felt "as if out of place at a refined commencement like this as President Ford would feel at a Ronald Reagan film festival or Phyllis Diller at a Miss Universe contest," Bob Hope yesterday addressed the graduating class of Westminster Choir College, in ceremonies held at the Princeton University Chapel. The comedian, who described himself as a "vandyville gyp," donned a black robe and mortarboard for the occasion.

Those diplomas are important," Mr. Hope told the graduates. "Now you know what kind of work you're out of."

According to the New Jersey Master Hair Dressers and Cosmetologists Association, Phyllis Diller's beauty rating is improving. The chairman of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, yesterday announced his retirement after 23 years in Congress. Representative James A. Haley, a Democrat from Florida, is 77 years old.

"I think the time has come for me to step aside clear the way for someone else," said Mr. Haley. He is credited with breaking several criminal groups in Florida, when he served the State House of Senators in 1950.

Mr. Briggs, however happens to be president of the school, and so he must do every thing I can to see that it is out." Plans for campus cakin of the weed went smoke.

3 States Hold Primaries Today; Rhode Island Stressed

Continued From Page 1, Col. 1 to organize a drive here, is still generally considered the front runner, although Mr. Church is believed to have made inroads by campaigning here in recent days. Mr. Brown is in a somewhat difficult position, since he is on the Rhode Island ballot and is urging voters to pull the "uncommitted" lever.

In the Republican race, President Ford is generally considered to be well ahead of his rival, former Gov. Ronald Reagan of California. There are 19 Republican convention delegates from Rhode Island.

But in conservative South Dakota and Montana, which each send 20 delegates to the Republican National Convention, Mr. Reagan is favored heavily in Montana and slightly in South Dakota.

In Montana, Mr. Church is considered the favored Democratic candidate, for a regional pattern has been emerging in recent primaries, and his native state is next door. Mr. Church has won three primaries—Idaho, Oregon and Nevada—and has lost only in Nevada, where he did little campaigning, to Mr. Brown.

In South Dakota, Arizona Representatives Morris K. Udall appears to be overcoming the early advantage of Mr. Carter, because of the endorsements of both of the state's United States Senators, George McGovern, and James G. Abourezk. Mr. McGovern, the party's 1972 nominee, has sent letters to all the state's Democrats urging them to vote for Mr. Udall. Should the tall Congressman win, it would be his first primary victory. All of the candidates are campaigning with one eye on June 8, with crucial primaries in Ohio, California and New Jersey.

The question for the three Democrats—all operating far from their regional bases—is whether Mr. Carter is vulnerable here.

A victory for Mr. Church in an eastern industrial state would give a boost to his position as an alternative candidate. A victory for Mr. Carter would restore some of the luster tarnished in the recent reversals. A Carter defeat, even though the number of delegates is small, would encourage efforts by the party elements attempting to deny him first ballot success at the convention, thus throwing the selection process into bargaining.

This is a heavily industrialized, strongly Democratic state with a high unemployment rate. Some of its problems have been caused by the shutdown of the major naval installations here by the Nixon Administration.

The state ranges from the capital of Providence, where the hitops include Brown University, stunning old Federal houses and wood-framed ethnic neighborhoods, to the elegant old "cottages" of Newport to small fishing towns like Point Judith. Overwhelmingly white, the state includes strong ethnic concentrations of Italian, French-Canadian and Portuguese extraction.

Of the slightly more than 500,000 voters in the state, about a tenth are expected to vote tomorrow.

Carter Shifts Plans

Mr. Carter's campaign organization called The Providence Journal, the statewide newspaper, on Saturday night, to say that he was changing his plans and returning over the weekend "because we see the developing importance of Rhode Island as a primary." He told the newspaper the results would "set the stage for the last three primaries on June 8."

Mr. Carter had planned to end his campaigning here with a set of appearances last Tuesday.

One result of the call was two front-page articles in the Sunday Journal, one headlined "Carter Coming Back to Fight For R.I."

Mr. Carter did not make many appearances, however. He flew in last night, went to the Memorial Day parade in Warwick and appeared at an airport news conference. He reiterated his theme that he had campaigned across the country and was being opposed by entrenched forces in Washington who did not understand the "yearnings" of the American people and who sought to protect their position of "privilege."

Asked to be more specific, Mr. Carter replied: "I just don't care to name names."

Both Mr. Church and Mr. Brown have put in four days of campaigning here just before the voting.

Mr. Church, at a news conference last night, said that he took Mr. Carter's decision to return as a good omen. "I can only judge that he's been appraised that I'm gaining ground," he said.

Local Backing and Issues

The Idaho Senator has been campaigning here with the support of Senator Claiborne Pell and Representative Edward P. Beard. He has attempted to stress local issues, saying for instance, that he would favor a Trident submarine base for the state.

Today, in a cream-colored suit, he walked in parades in Wickford and Cranston, along with high school bands, National Guard units, horseback riders, small children in colonial costumes and local dogs.

Mr. Brown turned up at the West Warwick parade and walked the last few steps with Gov. Philip W. Noel. He went on to catch the parade in Warwick, but arrived too late. Then he went to the Rocky Point Amusement Park, but he was too early and few pleasure-seekers were there.

Udall in New Jersey

NEWARK, May 31—After campaign stops in South Dakota and Ohio, Morris K. Udall flew to New Jersey today for two fund-raising receptions and a rally in suburban Essex and Morris Counties.

Mr. Udall was greeted at Newark Airport by members of his district slate led by Representatives James J. Howard, Democrat of New Jersey, and Bill Bradley, the New York Knicks basketball player.

Mr. Udall stood on a chair and briefly addressed a surprised gathering of airport patrons. He said New Jersey's June 8 primary "is the last turn of the wheel" and the last opportunity "to slow down the [Carter] bandwagon."

Mr. Udall appealed for a "chance to make my case and do something in Madison Square Garden."

Fred Bohan, Mr. Udall's New Jersey campaign coordinator, said the candidate would return to New Jersey Friday and possibly once more before the primary election.

Wallace Denies Any Talks On Releasing His Delegates

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 31 (UPI)—A spokesman for Gov. George C. Wallace denied today a report that Mr. Wallace had talked to Jimmy Carter about the possibility of releasing his 163 Democratic-convention delegates to the Presidential campaign from Georgia.

"It isn't true," Governor Wallace's press secretary, Billy Joe Camp, said when questioned about a Time magazine report that Mr. Carter had approached Governor Wallace but obtained no pledges.

"There has not been any discussion between the two gentlemen regarding the delegates," Mr. Camp said.

Mr. Carter, campaigning in Warwick, R. I., also denied the report, saying he had spoken only to inactive candidates, not to Mr. Wallace.

Mr. Camp also said that Governor Wallace was considering a bid in 1978 for the Senate seat held by John Sparkman, who might retire, but that no decision had been made.

Party Names Keynote

SALT LAKE CITY, May 31 (AP)—An author and lecturer associated with the John Birch Society has been named keynote speaker for the national American Party Convention. The Utah party chairman, Hal Massey, announced today that Scott Stanley Jr. of the American Opinion Speakers Bureau will speak at the convention June 17 to 19 in the Salt Lake City Salt Palace.

Will They Think Mink in June?

A TAYLOR cockbuster of a audience seemed to be the retail (but will she June?) She invited several romers, along from other press the other an overlong eces for both men—and mad the furs themelves tended to get lost in a kaleidoscope of satin jumpsuits and orange boots with sky-high heels.

Revillon has two designers: Jean-Paul Avizou and Fernando Sanchez. Avizou led off and his curtain raisers were a key to what might follow. They are a trio of dyed mink suits—blue-green, bright rust and gray. The skirts came off and volis, the models were wearing matching Ultra-suede pants and boots. A similar stunt happened with a black broadtail suit: the underskirt was black velvet.

Things quieted down a bit when Avizou got into mink and sable, although the sable had the biggest collar and sleeves in town. Then some more of those wild-colored minks. This time they were coats lined with matching quilted satin and over satin jumpsuits. One wondered where Parisians wear them. Fernando Sanchez's group-—Elsa Peretti; Kenneth Jay Lane, Elaine Kaufman, Bobby Short and Nan Kempner—were lined up in a group near the stage. "The celebrities," a Revillon staffer explained to a group of French visitors.

Sanchez also likes quilled silk and fur combinations, but his were brown or beige. Then he went into virtuoso tricks: fur on fur. A hooded black broadtail coat reversing to mink, a Lakoda seal mated to nutria.

Sanchez did a number of his and-her furs. Skunk parkas, for instance. The inevitable mink duo. And finally, for the man who bought a mink overcoat last year and has another step up the ladder, this year he can have the same number in sable.

Halston—he says everybody's calling him Sweetie—these days—has moved his fur designing talents to Ben Kahn this year. Since this house buys some of the most luxurious pelts, it gives the designer a chance to let loose on superfurs such as a $35,000 sable, as well as some of the sportier pelts he likes so well.

His fans can look for a double-breasted overcoat and a blazer of natural gray fox (which is actually red mixed with gray). A slate-colored raccoon coat has a hood, another raccoon is cut like a trenchcoat. There's a smasher of a fisher greatcoat. A sable paw poocho is edged with Russian mole. Everybody's mink coat is slender and tubular.

Halston also likes the looser balmacco—he does it in the taupe Creole mink which is exclusive with Ben Kahn. The same mink makes a wrap coat with a big sable collar. Silver fox, that vamp of a fur, is used for a greatcoat and a jacket.

Fur suits often leave a lot to be desired—Halston's black broadtail one is neatly done. In addition to the Halston design, Ben Kahn has his own collection to fill in any possible gaps.

The Brothers Christie used to deluge their collection with chinchilla, some of it dyed in improbable shades. The chinchilla is still there, but calmed down to the gray or beige varieties and this house is now involved in a larger range of pelts.

The brothers showed, for instance, some excellent Canadian lynxes, plus a group of the American variety, which is darker in color and less expensive. They are fond of capes—a leopard cloth one reversing to hamster, a big, fluffy raccoon one.

Minks are ribbed narrowly like corduroy, ridged more widely, left au naturel, or used in the "hide-out" technique—skin side outside, fur side in, and the whole business reversible. There are attractive dark brown broad-tails and the new golden variety, often collared in sable or lynx.

The Christies also attempted some men's furs. A raccoon jacket is dandy for a man. But the audience hoped they were joking when they sent out a 6-foot, 4-inch male model in a floor-length white mink coat.

Check up another sports-wear designer doing his thing with pelts. Kasper has made his debut in furs with a collection for Louis Milona.

- A World of 'Idiot Proof' Crepes and Pseudo-Delicatessen Meat -

By MIMI SHERATON

GO—Food well seasoned adequacy seems to be the special ever-increasing number of brands around the country. In most of the public still assumes the food served in a restaurant was actually prepared on premises by a resident chef. More and more restaurateurs to cut labor costs and fly their hives in general, are prepared convenience foods, using them off as their own.

At least, is the conclusion to draw after seeing food last week at the National Association's annual trade cord crowd of 100,000 restaurant owners, hotel and food service managers, and franchise chain operators viewed the 907 exhibits in addition to a phantasmagoria of kitchen equipment and on appointments, a dreary convenience foods in various stages of preparation, from meats merely pre-cut and frozen away to fully cooked entrees only to be reheated.

restaurant owners to tell on their menus which dishes were not made in their kitchen, would have found plenty of grit for their mills at this show.

The big news was crepes, with easy-to-use mixes substituting for fresh eggs and milk, and crepe-making machinery of various types, all designed to be what is known in the trade as "idiot-proof." Not one of the half-dozen crepes tested was anything but pasty, tasteless and sticky.

Now that turkey no longer tastes like turkey, there's a big push on to make it taste like something else. The result is a group of pseudo-delicatessen meats called turkey-salami, turkey pastrami, turkey-ham and turkey bologna, made entirely of turkey, colored, spiced, smoked and textured to simulate the costlier, fattier originals. Although made by three or four different processors, all of the versions tasted were identically damp, limp, salty and more or less peppery.

A number of meats looked less than promising, including pre-sliced, sandwich portions of delicatessen meats sealed in boiling bags and accounting for much of the steamy, gray pastrami and corned beef sandwiches one is served these days in coffee shops and roadside chain eateries. Frozen, pre-cooked steaks and hamburgers with grid marks that were seared or painted on and rubbery, frozen, cooked sausage patties seemed bad enough to make one give up eating altogether.

Oscar Mayer introduced "special tenderloin steaks," formed of two tenderloins dusted with tripolyphosphate so they stay together after being sealed in casings and frozen.

A company salesman showed them off, saying proudly, "Don't they look like hockey pucks?" I had to admit they did.

Swift's canned cooked bacon had a handy feature, pointed out by a representative: "The bacon has to be heated if you want it crisp. But lots of schools use it cold, right from the can, when making bacon, tomato and lettuce sandwiches."

Dried Lettuce
There was nothing surprising or remarkable about the vinyl gardens full of frozen or canned vegetables, but I was not quite prepared for dried lettuce and salad greens, processed by Fresh Foods Inc. and Orval Kent, "The Salad People."

Shredded lettuce is spun-dried in a centrifuge, then packed in plastic bags and cartons and sent out to fast food chains for burgers, as well as to countless restaurants for their salad bars. Both stew and lettuce, treated this way, looked like slightly moistened, green excelsior.

Frying was by far the most popular method of cooking and by noon each day the air was cloudy with rising grease and steam. Almost everything that was fried was breaded, good news to the people at Golden Dips, the company that makes most of the batters and breadings used by restaurants and institutions.

"If it's edible, it's breadable," was their motto, and looking around the hall it was hard to doubt the claim. It is hard to recall just how many crisp, golden tubes of deep-fried air I sampled, but there were at least three dozen, in the guises of onion rings, shrimp or potatoes, all made from pastes, powders or dics that cooked hollow and were virtually indistinguishable from each other.

Potatoes took, perhaps, the worst beating of all, in metallic tasting potato pancakes, mixes (Tato-mix), or, grimmer yet, in French's Automash, a dispenser that spews forth "hot buttery-flavored mashed potatoes." Press the button and what comes out is a milky gray stream of mush which thickens as it stands. "In just seven seconds it's all set," said the demonstrator and she was right.

Any chef working with instant mashed potatoes is, of course, stuck when he wants to make stuffed baked potatoes because he has no shells. To come to his rescue, Hebler has devised Tater Shells, small brown oval boats that look as though they were formed of stiffened brown wrapping paper but made, widely enough, from Idaho potatoes. "An black broadtail, or pieced with gray fox poncho with gray flannel is a refreshing idea.

Kasper also thinks about the woman who would prefer not to look like an Arctic explorer. His fur blazers are trim and neat, and his blazer coat in ranch mink is a nifty, slender affair with precisely placed flap pockets.

A new house called Jerry Sorbara has joined the furriers who inhabit "downtown" Seventh Avenue (below 30th Street) this season. Mr. Sorbara, who used to be with Ben Kahn, has joined Bernard Merson, recently of Bergdorf Goodman.

The extensive collection was very well received by store buyers who do the bulk of their business in classic furs that are planned to give a woman a good deal of mileage. No fun and games here, but the furs themselves are good quality and well-made.

There was applause, for instance, for a pair of unusually nice fisher coats, with longer hair and more subtle shadings than the general run of this popular fur. When a Russian sable coat emerged, a competitor gave it the height of praise: "There's nothing wrong with that," he said. A floor-length ranch mink drew another round of applause.

New ideas here were a fox jacket dyed to resemble fisher, a very flirty Russian raccoon and a charming evening shawl of beige chinchilla bordered with chinchilla.

said, "but, of course that's the customer's choice. We can only point out his malady."

Whatever his malady, the customer's sneakers bore no trace later when they emerged—resoled—from Harvey's back room. These soles were of a weight and tread designed for tennis, but the shop also stocks types for basketball, boating, jogging and running.

The process, as demonstrated by Mr. LaManna, a ski pro and tennis buff himself, is a simple but painstaking one that requires a special sanding machine.

First, the old sole is sanded off and coated with cement. Then the pre-cut replacement sole, also sanded and spread with cement, is hammered onto the shoe, for a tight bond. Finally a new strip of rubber is cemented around the sneaker and joined at the instep to disguise the repair.

The result, said Mr. LaManna, beaming at his handiwork, is "the comfort of your old uppers with the durability of new bottoms."

If your uppers are made of leather, you may get five retreads, according to Mr. Leonard. Canvas sneakers, even the expensive ones, can rarely be resoled more than twice, and inexpensive ones are simply not worth the cost of retreading.

On the other hand, saving money is not the only reason for saving sneakers. Of the 100 retread at Harvey's in the last six weeks, some belonged to people who could well foot the bill for a new pair.

"You know how it is," Mr. Leonard said. "Nothing fits like your old sneaker." The address of his shop: Harvey's Sporting Goods, 3178 Emmons Avenue, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11225. Telephone: 743-0054.

Rosi Mittermaier, West Germany's champion Alpine skier, made it official yesterday in Starnberg, West Germany, she announced her retirement from the sport and said she was joining an American firm to design sports clothes.

The 25-year-old winner of two gold medals at this year's Winter Olympic Games in Innsbruck, Austria, said: "From now on, I will take part in no more ski races. The decision to stop racing was a hard one, but my great success in Innsbruck overruled all my plans."

"They have already dubbed me the grandma on skis," she said while explaining her decision to give up competing in the 1978 world championships. "I would prefer that they didn't start calling me the great grandmother."

Walter Byers, the executive director of the National Collegiate Athletic Association since 1951, has been chosen as the recipient of the James J. Janet Guthrie was generally pleased with her 15th-place finish in the 40-car World 600 race at Charlotte, N.C., on Sunday.

"My strategy was to run as hard as I could in the traffic as I found it," she said after improving her 27th-place starting position. "I think it worked out fairly well. I think basically I drove a fairly clean race."

Included on the 43-member British swimming team for the Olympic Games in Montreal were Jon Park and Ann Bradshaw, two natives of South Africa, which has been excluded from the competition. They qualified for selection because they have British-born fathers, travel on British passports and have not competed internationally for another country.

"I have had a lot of people ask me if I think it is really fair," said Miss Bradshaw. "I can only say that if I were allowed to compete for South Africa, I would do so. I have

The 19-year-old U.C.L.A. junior started slowly, losing the first four games, but came back with passing shots to break Fleming three times in the second set and go on to victory.

Scanlon became only the second player from the Texas school to win the title in the 92 years of the tournament. Dick Stockton won in 1972.

Fleming, 6-foot-5-inch power hitter and also a junior, was tired after his long semifinal victory over Bruce Manson of Southern California and a doubles match yesterday.

Wood, Field and Stream: Waterfowl Habitat

By NELSON BRYANT During the past decade, wetlands waterfowl habitat in the United States had disappeared at an alarming rate, giving way to agriculture, housing, projects, highways and industry.

For this reason, the recent extension of the Wetlands Loan Act of 1961 was good news for those who care about the future of North American ducks and geese.

Until 1961, waterfowl habitat in the United States was bought with funds realized from the sale of so-called Federal duck stamps to hunters, but by that time the funds so realized were woefully inadequate to do the job.

The 1961 act permitted loans of up to $105 million for wetlands acquisition, with the authorization expiring this September when repayment of the loan was to have begun, with 75 percent of the annual duck-stamp sales going for that purpose.

The new act changed the name of the duck stamp to the Migratory Bird Hunting and Conservation Stamp, in the hope that ornithologists would contribute, in addition, President Ford has asked Congress to consider raising the price of the stamp from the present $5. In recent years sales of stamps brought in about $12 million annually.

Some examples of the rate at which waterfowl habitat is vanishing: in Minnesota about 40 percent of the wetlands that existed in 1964 were drained in the following 10 years; about two-thirds of the original 24 million acres of bottom lands and hardwoods in the Mississippi River delta have been replaced by soybean fields and other agricultural crops.

The new act also increased the amount to be loaned from $105 million to $200 million. At present, $93.4 million has been appropriated, leaving $106.6 million to be appropriated and spent.

The Montauk Deep Sea Club's annual Woods Hole Invitational Swordfish Tournament will be June 25-27 this year. This is prime time in which to try for swordfish—or broadbill, as they are also called—off Long Island, and veteran anglers will be thinking of that glorious tournament in 1959 when Montauk boats baited more than 200 broadbill during one weekend. To "bait" a swordfish—which were first taken on rod and reel in 1913—means to present properly a trolled bait to a fish that has been sighted swimming on the surface. In his "Successful Ocean Game Fishing," Frank T. Moss notes that of 50 fish sighted, "you may get the bait in front of 20, have a positive reaction from 10, hook four and save one." The average annual catch of the species in their major areas of concentration in this country is about 50, Moss observes, "representing at least 1,000 baiting attempts and 2,500 fish sighted."

The affair is open to all, the fee $200 a boat. The proceeds help pay for the Woods Hole (Mass.) graphic, Institut formation, call (617) 552-2200.

Forego First in Metropolitan; Jersey Derby to Life's Hope

Favorite Beats Master Derby at Belmont

By MICHAEL STRAUSS
The mighty Forego, making his first stakes appearance of the 1976 season, was up to his old tricks yesterday. Conceding weight—from 4 to 24 pounds to his five rivals—the talented son of Forti captured the $111,100 Metropolitan Handicap at Belmont Park.

A crowd of 47,078, the largest of New York's season, saw the 6-year-old gelding, owned by Martha F. Gerry's Lazy F Ranch, rush into contention rounding the turn and outlast Mrs. Robert E. Lehmann's Master Derby in the rush to the wire. The winning margin at the end of the one-mile contest was a head. The time was 1:34 4/5.

The enthusiastic turnout, which put the attendance for the three-day holiday weekend to 110,874, obviously was well aware of the ability of Forego, the horse of the year for the last two years. Though Forego was toting top weight of 130 pounds, the champion thoroughbred was sent from the post as the even-money favorite. Forego's mutuels were $4.20, $2.60 and $2.20 for $2 across the board.

Heliodoro Gustines, who Forego, seemed in no hurry to rush his mount in the early running. It was during the run around the turn and down the stretch that the jockey turned his horse loose.

Race to the Finish
The big gelding finally caught the pace-setting Master Derby about 20 yards inside the 16th pole. But he was unable to shake off Master Derby. Indeed, a stride or two from the finish, it appeared that Master Derby seemed the stronger of the two.

Gustines made reference to this sequence after the race. "After my horse got the lead, he tried to ease himself," he said. "I thought to myself, 'Oh, I'm beat.'"
Gustines said he felt Forego seemed a little sluggish and that he had to "work on him" to get him going.

"Even then he didn't give me as much as he has other times."
Some horsemen felt after the race that Forego's sluggishness might be attributed to his late start this season. Last year, he had raced through the early winter's campaign.

Forego, who has leg problems, was bowled over by Piniella attempting to score in that opening game, still had sore ribs from the crash, and team doctors had advised him to take a rest before the situation got worse. Piniella, who had already missed a few games with a swollen finger, was healthy but was being piloted by Carlos May, the left-handed designated hitter.

Cojak, Tony Agnello up, leading the field in the Jersey Derby at Garden State Park yesterday. Cojak is disqualified for interference in the stretch and was placed second.

Cojak Dropped to 2d on Foul

By STEVE CADY
Special to The New York Times
CHERRY HILL, N.J., May 31—If horse racing had the same rules as football, Cojak probably would have won the $133,700 Jersey Derby today at Garden State Park.

Instead, the Entremont Stable colt was disqualified from first and placed second in back of Harbor View Farm's Life's Hope for nearly obliterating that rival in the stretch with a blood-side block. Life's Hope, trained by Laz Barrera, returned $8.40 for $2 as the second choice.

Cojak is a race horse, not a blocking back, and race horses can't be expected to knock other horses sideways in full view of the stewards without being penalized for it.

That's what Cojak did to Life's Hope as the two leaders battled side by side with about a sixteenth of a mile to go in the 17th modern running of the 1 1/2-mile race.

Life's Hope, ridden by Miguel Rivera, scraped against the rail and nearly fell as Cojak lunged in and bumped him hard.

So Life's Hope, finishing a regular objection sign lighted up as Rivera, the leading jockey this season at Puerto Rico's El Comandante track, claimed fourth against Cojak, ridden by Tony Agnello.

Out on the track, Barrera said to Sonny Hine, trainer of Cojak, "I'm sorry it had to happen this way." Replied Hine: "I hope your horse didn't get hurt."

Around oonetime, Barrera had scratched the other half of his Jersey Derby entry, El Portugues, because the colt developed a high fever. With El Portugues out, the crowd rose ahead of third-place Strawberry Landing, still looked good even though Cojak led him across the line by 1 1/2 lengths.

Seconds after the last horse in the field of nine 3-year-olds crossed the finish line, the stewards flashed the inquiry sign on the tote board. The "3" already posted there, designating Cojak's unofficial first-place finish, began blinking ominously.

35,938 at Game in Fenway

By PARTON KEESE
Special to The New York Times
BOSTON, May 31—Boos rained down on the hated New York Yankees tonight in Fenway Park. The cat-calls from Boston Red Sox fans that greeted this opener of a four-game series were reminiscent of things past, particularly the opener of the series 11 days ago in Yankee Stadium when the fired-up teams brawled in the dirt around home plate.

Tonight a couple of rich pitchers faced each other, Catfish Hunter for New York and Ferguson Jenkins for Boston. The cast remained about the same for the other positions except for the combatants who began the fight in New York. Carlton Fisk, the Red Sox catcher, and Lou Piniella of the Yankees.

The largest Fenway Park crowd since 1959—35,939 fans—saw the Yankees take the first game, 8-3. Several times in the game fans threw cherry bombs onto the field, which exploded near Nicky Rivers in center field. In the eighth inning, the umpires announced that they would forfeit the contest to New York if any more firecrackers were thrown out.

Fisk, who was bowled over by Piniella attempting to score in that opening game, still had sore ribs from the crash, and team doctors had advised him to take a rest before the situation got worse. Piniella, who had already missed a few games with a swollen finger, was healthy but was being piloted by Carlos May, the left-handed designated hitter.

Brazilians Take Soccer Cup

By ALEX YANNIS
Special to The New York Times
NEW HAVEN, May 31—Brazil captured the American Bicentennial Soccer Cup by defeating Italy, 4-1, in a bitterly fought game at Yale Bowl today before 36,096 fans, including Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

Despite the fighting, the violent tackling, the ejection of three players and the cautions to five others, some good soccer was played by the Italians during the first 30 minutes and the Brazilians the rest of the way.

The South Americans were awesome at time, displaying the magic that has brought Pelé's countrymen three World Cups. The Brazilians deserve much credit again because they had to rally to overtake Italy.

Featuring a young team, virtually unrecognizable from the squad that played in the last World Cup in 1974, Brazil showed it must be reckoned seriously as a cootender for top honors again.

"This is a much better team than the one we had in West Germany," said Roberto Rivelino, the Brazilian captain who directs play from his midfield position. His coach, Oswaldo Brandão, went a bit further, saying: "We are ready to get to the top of the world again."

Coincidentally, Italy was Brazil's victim in the 1970 World Cup final in Mexico City by the same score as today's game. Instead of Pelé, Gerson and Tostao in the lineup, however, Brazil today had Gil, Roberto, Zico and Lula. The way these young Brazilians played was so superb that at times they humiliated the Italians.

bases filled and the Mets won, 5-3. Those Philadelphia fans hit me with beer cans and everything else—hey! wow!" He was up on his feet again, for now in the fourth inning the Mets were batting around, disposing of Jerry Reuss. Some of the six runs they scored in that inning were earned and some came by special arrangement in the Pittsburgh outfield. The Pittsburgh outfielders do things not often seen elsewhere in the major leagues.

In that fourth inning, for instance, Al Oliver and Richie Zisk executed a pincers movement against a tall fly by John Milner, advancing, taking cover, sneaking up on the ball. It bounced off the fence and was pawed at disastefully while Milner, pulling up on second base, watched two runs score.

"Neither of them had any intention of catching that ball," a fan said.

Unsinkable Mr. Murtaugh
Ten Mets batted in that inning. Ten batted in the fifth, and five scored. Kent Tekulve, Pittsburgh's second pitcher, made way for Ramon Hernandez, Pittsburgh's third. Kingman didn't get any home runs, but before anybody had been put out in New York's half of the fifth he had been to bat four times, had made two singles and turned his job in right field over to Benny Ayala.

Benny didn't stay long. On his first play in the outfield he ran into Red Garrett, second baseman pro tem, who was catching a pop fly. Ayala retired to the trainer's room to have six stitches sewn into his profile.

The score was now 13-1, and Jon Matlack threw a comfortable five-hitter. It was the Mets' first victory in four games, their second in nine, their fifth in 17. They have not been doing splendidly, and here they were slapping around the defending champions of the National League East, the team that has won five division titles, one pennant and one world championship in the last six years.

Gorman Out In French Net Upset

PARIS, May 31 (UPI)—Seven United States players, including Tom Gorman, were eliminated today at a controversial start of the $210,000 French open tennis championships at Roland Garros Stadium.

The clay-court tournament, second leg of the grand slam, which includes the Australian, Wimbledon and United States opens, attracted 114 players. Many criticized the use of heavy, low-pressure balls on the slow red clay.

Jimmy Connors, who said he wanted to practice on grass for Wimbledon, and Ilie Nastase, tied to the Hawaiian Leis of World Team Tennis, skipped the event.

The first giant-killer was Rolf Norberg, a 24-year-old Swede known primarily for his ability in doubles. He upset Gorman, 6-4, 7-6, 6-2, after having entered the draw as a substitute at the last moment.

"They call these guys lucky losers, but they often turn out to be lucky winners," said Gorman, whose timing was way off. "They play as though they have nothing to lose." Then he added: "I haven't been here long enough to acclimatize myself and these heavy balls make things very difficult." Gorman, 30, reached the semifinals three years ago.

team, set up the first Brazilian goal, which came after 28 minutes of play. The Brazilian captain sent Lula free with a long, accurate pass on the left side and all Lula had to do was return the pass in front of the Italian goal. Gil was right there, blasting the ball past Dino Zoff, the Italian goalkeeper, who was helpless.

The Italians had been dominant to that point and had taken the lead when Fabio Capello, their inside forward, scored only 65 seconds into the game. Capello, who seemed to be in better form today than in Friday night's loss to England, was lost to Italy when he injured his left knee seven minutes before intermission. The injury required 10 stitches and he never returned to the game.

The Azzurri, as the Italian national team is known, was time and again thwarted in the early stages by Leao, the Brazilian goalkeeper, but they also have to blame themselves for missing the goal when they had the Brazilians under pressure.

After the Italian domination ended harmlessly except for the one goal, the Brazilians took over, despite losing Lula and playing with 10 men. Lula was sent off by the Uruguayan referee, Ruiz Barreto, for kicking Eraldo Fecci, who had replaced the injured Capello.

The Italians again collapsed in the second half, allowing the Brazilians to take full control. A score came quickly for the Brazilians as another of the those long, cross-passes by Rivelino found Gil on the right side. The Brazilian outside right beat two Italian defenders with ease, and then beat Zoff with a left-footed shot.

Gil missed seconds after his goal, while the Italians were just watching, but the Brazilians scored again over the Italians, who were also playing with 10 men because of Bettega's ejection for kicking Marco Antonio.

The third Brazilian goal came from Zico, the small forward who split the Italian defense and clearly beat Zoff. The goal came after 28 minutes of the second half and the fourth two minutes later.

It was made by Roberto, who toyed with two defenders before putting the ball past Zoff.

By now the Italians collapsed was complete and they started to foul their opponents violently. Franco Causio was sent off for kicking Rivelino and the Italians played with nine men the rest of the game.

Team America Loses

PHILADELPHIA, May 31 (AP)—Kevin Kegan booted two goals today as England scored its second victory in three games in the American Bicentennial Soccer Cup by defeating Team America, 3-1.

Team America finished the round-robin series with a 0-3 record. Its goal was scored late in the game by a substitute, Stewart Scullion. It was the only goal scored by the Americans in the series. The game attracted 16,231 fans.

Dahlia First Life's Hope Placed In $200,000 Coast Race

INGLEWOOD, Calif., May 31 (AP)—Dahlia, winner of 30,781 had trouble deciding on a favorite. They finally made Wardlaw the 5-2 choice, followed by Life's Hope at 3-1, Cojak and Gay Jitterbug each 4-1 and On The Sly 9-2. Strawberry Landing was a 42-1 long shot.

Ironically, this was the first time Cojak had been disqualified despite a history of erratic behavior. His screwball antics today marked the fourth time in his last seven races he has failed to keep a straight course.

After he bore in during the Swift, Gotham and Wood Memorial in New York, his trainer put an extension on the left side of his blinkers. With this change, he ran straight, but out of the money, in the Kentucky Derby and Preakness.

Today, just when it seemed he would run the race his handlers had expected of him in those Triple Crown events, Cojak misbehaved again. He needs either new blinkers or a Dale Carnegie course.

"He wasn't lugging in at all when I switched sticks," said a disappointed Agnello.

The incident dampened what had been a thoroughly exciting battle between the two horses. Cojak, able to make his early speed work for him instead of against him, as it had in the Derby and Preakness, led for more than half a mile.

Going to the far turn, though, Rivera sent Life's Hope up along the inside, and the gelding sailed past Cojak into the lead. At that point, Life's Hope began doing what Barrera had warned Rivera about. He began to loaf.

Cojak, under left-handed whipping by Agnello, stormed back and regained the lead in the upper stretch. Then Agnello switched the stick, tapped his mount once right-handed—and Cojak angled over from the outside and threw the block that cost him the race.

Life's Hope, the Jimmy Carter of racing's Derby primaries for 3-year-olds, has now won two of the four derbies he has contested. He won the Illinois Derby the same day Bold Forbes, also trained by Barrera, won the Kentucky Derby. Earlier, Kentucky-bred Life's Hope had finished third in the Santa Anita Derby and second in the Hollywood Derby. He was sixth in the Preakness.

In a sense, today's Derby was a case of the mice playing while the cats were away. Bold Forbes, Honest Pleasure

State Vault Record Bettered by Arietta

By WILLIAM J. MILLER

Lance Arietta upset Bill Hartley in the pole vault with a New York State and meet record of 15 feet 7 3/4 inches and Christian Brothers Academy of Lincoln, N.J., surprised Bishop Loughlin in the distance medley yesterday at the Eastern States schoolboy outdoor track and field championships.

Cherry Hill High of New Jersey, on the strength of two field-event victories, captured the team title at St. John's University in Queens with 15 points. Monroe-Woodbury of upstate New York was a close runner-up with 14.

Arietta, a senior at Tappan Zee (N.Y.) High, had been in a vaulting "slump" since setting a state indoor record of 14-4 1/4 last winter. In some meets this outdoor season he was just barely making 14 feet and a 15-footer did not seem to be in sight.

Yesterday, however, the small, compact Arietta was at his best as he cleared 15-7 3/4 on his second try while Hartley of Southern Regional, Mooahawkin, N.J., the East Coast's only 16-foot vaulter, failed in three attempts.

The former state mark was set by Andy Piaturo of Half Hollows High School in 1974. Hartley held the previous meet mark of 15 feet.

Lifting the gloom for the United States were Erik Van Dillen, who downed Roger Taylor of Britain, 6-3, 6-4, 7-5, and Billy Martin, who overcame to defeat Japan's Jun Kazumasa, 6-3, 6-0, 6-4, 7-5.

Shrewsbury Stewart had a hard battle in defeating Gianni Occhipeto of Italy, 6-0, 2-6, 5-7, 6-4, 6-3. Trey Waitke gave the United States another success with an uphill 4-6, 6-6, 1-7, 6-6 triumph over Georges Goven of France.

Bjorn Borg of Sweden is seeking to become the first man to win the title for the third year in a row. He and Arthur Ashe were scheduled to play tomorrow.

Tanner Advances

MANCHESTER, England, May 31 (AP)—Roscoe Tanoer easily downed Peter Finn of Britain, 6-4, 6-1, in the first round of the Greater Manchester Northern tennis tournament today. Patti Hogan, another American, beat Lorna Whitfield of South Africa, 6-1, 6-1.

Title to Maurita

ROCHESTER, May 31 (AP)—Miguel Maurita of Penn State beat Rick Gregory of Temple, 6-3, 6-3, and won the Class A singles title at the

Giles, Siderowf Advance In British Amateur Golf

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, May 31 (AP)—Vinny Giles and Dick Siderowf, top American contenders for the British Amateur golf championship, won their first-round matches today under contrasting weather conditions on the St. Andrews Old Course.

Giles, of Richmond, the defending champion, played in morning sunshine and scored a 3-and-2 victory over 17-year-old Hogan Stott of England.

Siderowf, of Westport, Conn., who won the title in 1973, set off in heavy rain in the afternoon and defeated David Carrick of Scotland, 4 and 3.

Giles and Siderowf were both two-under-par, which were impressive performances on a day of difficult conditions and generally high scoring on the 6,914-yard, par-72 course.

Two other Americans from different generations scored victories at the 19th hole.

Pat Healy, a 16-year-old Chicago schoolboy and the youngest player in the tournament, came from 3 down to eliminate Gordon MacDonald of Scotland. And Bob Falkenberg of Los Angeles, the 1948 Wimbledon tennis champion, rolled in a 10-foot putt at the 19th to oust Massimo Mannelli of Italy.

Giles, trying to become the first American to win this title two straight times since Lawsoo Little in 1934 and 35, made a 20-foot putt for a birdie-3 at the third hole. He had a bogey at the sixth but then birdied the seventh and eighth. He reached the turn at two under par and played par golf from then on.

Siderowf began with a 20-foot putt and a birdie at the first hole. A 15-footer gave him another birdie at the ninth, and he birdied the 12th by rolling on a 12-foot putt.

Among other winners today were Alan Pate of Mobile, Ala., who defeated Mark Jones of Minneapolis, 2 up, and Steve Smith of Jericho, L.I., who ousted David Fowler of Scotland in 19 holes.

Dorsey Lynch of Garden City, L.I., was eliminated by Bud Bradley of Los Angeles, 1 up.

Coles Takes Playoff

SANDWICH, England, May 31 (AP)—Neil Coles tapped in a three-foot putt at the third-audience-death playoff hole to win the Penfold pro tournament at the Royal St. George course today.

The 41-year-old Londoner won the playoff from Eamonn Darcy of Ireland and Gary Player of South Africa, and collected the first prize of $17,500, the richest in the 1976 European circuit.

Ballet: 'Rialto' by Griffin

Nine-Section Suite Executed by These Dance Collection Is Bathed in Nostalgia

This scruffy Aquarian age has so little glamour that one eagerly luxuriates in the reflected glow from another glittering era. The term employed to cover such longing and sense of loss is nostalgia, and it bathed "Rialto," Rodney Griffin's new ballet given by the Theater Dance Collection Sunday evening at Choro-ground.

The nine-section suite of dances began with Don Lopez's happy and saucy soft-shoe solo, continued through Cynthia Riffle's elegant choline presentation and Lynn Simonson's amusing portrayal of an audience-courting performance. Jaclyn Villamil and Danny Buraczewski were the delightfully sick pseudo-South American couple, while Mr. Griffin and Lynne Taylor assayed through a disdainfully self-composed duet Audrey Ross contributed a bit terser solo and all for the finale. It exuded riod charm throughout movement, the German and Hoppe's surrealizing and slide project.

Miss Taylor's "Spy" tured Miss Simonson's restless spirit playing of piano playing and singing accompaniment of Judith, the composer. The reality of transient and a lost husband contemporary blues abetted by Miss I. sympathetic lyrics and Miss Villamil and Danny Buraczewski were the delightfully sick pseudo-South American couple, while Mr. Griffin and Lynne Taylor assayed through a disdainfully self-composed duet Audrey Ross contributed a bit

EDUCATION

Norman Christensen started college at 41. He used to be a theatre manager. Now he's on his way to a new career. Because of EXCEL EXCEL is a special B.A. program that recognizes the value of adult experience.

You can use that experience in our seminars where we take up tough questions that only adults can answer.

And if you're over 25, you can use it in our Life Experience program. You show us what you learned in the course of your life, and if it looks solid we'll give you college credit for it.

Your age and educational background don't matter. But intelligence does matter. Above all, you need the courage to face new challenges and the desire for a real education.

With our flexible year-round schedule you can go as fast or as slow as you wish.

Financial aid is available and we'll show you how to apply for it.

You can join us this fall. Take a step toward your B.A. Use the coupon or call 956-5890.

VIDEOTAPE WORKSHOPS FOR BEGINNERS

That's because you don't sit on your hands while someone demonstrates how you do it. You actually get to do it. Get your hands on the equipment from the very first session. So, at the end of three sessions, you come out with a videotape in your hands that you've actually produced. At other places you can spend up to 15 weeks and $500 and not get what you get in only 3 sessions for $75 at our Workshops. And that's actual hands-on experience in a whole new communications medium you can put to work for you in just about any area you work in. The arts. Business. Advertising. Public relations. Two Views of Chicago-School Architects

By PAUL GOLDBERGER

Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO—Here, where it has always been said that architects would rather build than talk, the architects have begun to talk. And they are not only talking, they are also arguing.

On the surface they are arguing about two museum exhibitions that have opened here concurrently—one entitled "100 Years of Architecture in Chicago—Continuity of Structure and Form," a review of the Chicago School, the rational, structural buildings that gave Chicago its reputation as the birthplace of the modern skyscraper, and the other entitled simply "Chicago Architects," a grouping of more eccentric work that has been left out of the history books.

The "100 Years" show, an expansion of an exhibition shown in Munich in 1973, is at the Museum of Contemporary Art, and it is, for want of a better word, the Establishment show—it includes the works of Sullivan, Burnham and Root, Mies van der Rohe and Skidmore, Owings and Merrill.

Broad Implications
The other exhibition prides itself on being, in the words of Stanley Tigerman, the Chicago architect who was one of its organizers, "a salon des refusés." It snubbed Chicago by first opening in New York last winter, and now that it has come home, it is occupying quarters in the lobby of the Time-Life Building, hardly the most auspicious space.

But it is this Establishment anti-Establishment quality that makes this debate so important, and gives it implications that go well beyond the architectural community of this city.

For years architectural historians have accepted the premise of the first show—that Chicago's importance to world architecture was in the invention of the steel-frame skyscraper and the rational system of designs that its architects derived from it, from Sullivan through to the glass towers of Mies van der Rohe. Chicago architecture was a moral crusade for the purity of rational, structurally determined form. Nothing disturbed good Chicagoans more than the whimsically decorated skyscrapers, full of historical details, designed by their counterparts in New York.

Federal Center in Chicago by Mies van der Rohe

tacks all of this. It suggests that a lot more was going on in Chicago beside rational steel-frame construction, and pleads for a more pluralistic view of history. In this sense, as a corrective to the tunnel-vision of architectural history, the countershows is invaluable.

But the show is trying to do more than broaden history; it is trying to change our very view of architecture, and this, ultimately, is what is most interesting about what is going on now in Chicago.

By rejecting the "classic" buildings of Chicago, from the nascent skyscraper form of Burnham and Root's 1886 Rookery to the technological dazzle of Skidmore, Owings and Merrill's 1973 Sears Tower, the countershows call for a more romantic architecture, an architecture more concerned with theatrics, with image, with pleasure, than with structural purity. The countershows points its fingers at the Establishment with a certain wicked laugh and a view that time is on its side, as it indeed appears to be—the movement throughout the country is toward a more romantic, even hedonistic, architecture.

Other School Replies
This clearly upsets the Chicago figures included in the "100 Years" show; Bruce Graham, the Skidmore, Owings & Merrill partner whose John Hancock Building and Sears Tower, among other works, are included in the show, calls the countershows "just the work of promoters—there was no need for it since it only calls attention to personal achievements, whereas the other exhibition tries to show an entire stream of development."

That is just the problem with the first show, charges the other side—"The '100 years' show exists to prove that the structural-functional architecture of Chicago was the genuine and legitimate architecture of our time, and we do not accept that," says Stuart Cohen, another of the second display's organizers.

"It is an architecture which ignores values, romanticism, symbolism, all the things we see as vital to architecture," says Mr. Tigerman. "Mies, Skidmore and the others have played themselves out—it is time for a wider view of the world. Hence our salon des refusés."

If they are a salon des refusés, who is their Mies? retorts Franz Schutze, one of the first show's organizers. "To compare the Chicago School to the 19th-century academy is ridiculous—the academy was hidebound, but the Chicago School has produced much better architecture than the Chicago pluralists."

To that, the countershows has no real reply, save for Mr. Cohen's reminder that he was not so interested in changing history as in expanding it. The pluralists do not challenge the importance of the Chicago School, only its validity as the dominant contemporary style. And indeed, the "100 Years" show, its organizers say, "isn't really a little history either—just a look at what we feel is our most important contribution."

Each side has, thus, made a certain diplomatic concession, but the debate continues, centered mainly on the question of whether the Chicago School has in fact "played itself out." If it has, then of course modern architecture has played itself out as well—something that has been talked about in East Coast academic circles for some time now, but a thought that is new and not a little shocking in the city where the modern movement has always been its most secure.

Dance Festival Extended to Newport

By ANNA KISSELGOFF

A variety of newly formed dance companies will be among the attractions at the 29th annual American Dance Festival at Connecticut College in New London this summer. For the first time, the festival will sponsor an extra week in another location, Newport, R.I.

The regular six-week season in New London will run from June 23 through Aug. 7. The performances in Newport, at the Rogers High School Auditorium, will open on Aug. 22 with the Pilobolus Dance Theater and continue on Aug. 23-24, with Judith Jamison sharing the program with the American Dance Machine, a new company created to perform and preserve choreography from American musicals. The Paul Taylor Dance Company will present a premiere by Mr. Taylor on Aug. 25-27 with sets and costumes by Alex Katz.

In explaining the extension of the festival to another location, its director, Charles Reichart, said: "Newport has a large summer population and has had little opportunity to see dance at home. The community has promised strong support."

During the last six years, the American Dance Festival has sponsored a "community outreach" program, sending dancers and teachers to other towns in Connecticut both during the summer session and in the winter. The program was extended to Newport last year, but this will be the first summer of formal performances administered by the festival.

The New London performances will include the debuts of the Metropolitan Opera Ballet Ensemble, a new company consisting of dancers from the Metropolitan Opera, and the Pauline Koner Dance Consort, the first company headed in over a decade by Miss Koner, one of modern dance's most prominent figures. Premieres will be presented by Miss Koner, Murray Louis, Bella Lewitzky, Bill Evans and the team of Nora Guthrie and Ted Rojante.

Revivals of dances by Isadora Duncan and Mary Wigman will be performed by Annabelle Gannon. The Chuck Davis Dance Company, the Nikolais Dance Theater and the Nancy Meenan Dance Company will also appear. Mabou Mines, an experimental theater group, will present a premiere, "merging theater and dance."

Anna Halprin and the San Francisco Dancers Workshop will conduct what the festival calls "a participatory workshop on dance as a vehicle for personal transformation." A music workshop will be presented by the group called Kirk Nurkoff's Natural Sound. The Darius Brubeck Trio will perform a Dave Brubeck score for the Murray Louis premiere.

The schedule of events for New London is as follows:
June 27, 28: Evening, 7:30 P.M. and 9:30 P.M. at the Rogers High School Auditorium. Tickets: $10, $15, $20, $25.
July 1, 2: Evening, 7:30 P.M. and 9:30 P.M. at the Rogers High School Auditorium. Tickets: $10, $15, $20, $25.
July 3, 4: Evening, 7:30 P.M. and 9:30 P.M. at the Rogers High School Auditorium. Tickets: $10, $15, $20, $25.
July 5, 6: Evening, 7:30 P.M. and 9:30 P.M. at the Rogers High School Auditorium. Tickets: $10, $15, $20, $25.

Friday from 11 A.M. to 6 P.M., and Saturday and Sunday until 7 P.M. More information: 766-9077.

UP THE WAY New Yorkers who have some free midday time before heading for the Fulton Market might want to look in today at noon on the popular Lunch & Learn lecture-meal series presented at Pace University, one block east of City Hall Park. These programs offer a minimum of information on a large variety of subjects, with buffet facilities available before and a speaker who knows his or her business.

Today's session has a Bicentennial subject, "The Kingdom vs. the People"—the emergence of the Declaration of Independence. The lecturer is Frank O'Neill, professor of history at Pace. The tab is $3.50 at the door for lunch and lecture, or $1.50 for lecture only. You can leave at any time. The double doors to the school's Schmitt Center are directly opposite the parking lot entrance to Beekman-Downtown Hospital.

GOOD TIMES The quaint-looking wood-and-glass front indicated a safe bet for drinks and food on a rainy night, with bright lights bathing the tavern-type sign of Third Avenue and 31st Street. The sign read: "The Good Times Restaurant." Inside, the place was lively, cheerful, cozy and clean. At the bar and tables, a crowd of young people and some middle-age couples—all in casual but unscruffy garb—looked expectantly toward the center piano where the emcee, Jack Dey, lifted the microphone and smiled. It was 9:25 P.M.

"Welcome to our third Wednesday evening of country and Western music," he said. "We also have other entertainment here at Good Times, mixing oew talent and our regulars, on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, our big night running over three hours. That's the cream," he added.

The rustic show began as Mr. Dey teamed with Bobby Berger, a strapping guitarist, to sing "Heartbreak Hotel." Later Mr. Berger was on his own, singing "Baby Sue." "Give Me Your Tomorrow" and several others. So far, the two men are the Wednesday regulars at The Good Times, along with a pretty vocalist named Alexandria, who also drew applause for "I'll Be Willing" and "All Over Now." The patrons here listen closely.

The first hour of the other night also included Henry Coey and Friends, a unit of young players and singers led by a droll youth in a bent Panama hat. Their biggest hit, "dedicated to Mayor Beano and the bartender," was "The Lady Man's Lady But the Workin' Man's a Fool." There is no cover or minimum charge at The Good Times (679-9077).

GOING OUT Guide

NEW STEAM "Come see how we've grown" is the public invitation from the new Fulton Market, which is part of the South Street Seaport Museum and tomorrow starts celebrating its first birthday at 2 P.M. with inducements of "seafood, beer, music and surprises."
Much has happened to the market during the last year. In the area formerly bustling with the activities of butchers and fish vendors, who rented space at Fulton and Front Streets as far back as the 1820's, there is now a variety of entrepreneurs operating a bazaar of foods, gifts, curiosities and crafts. Informality is the keynote down here where the tall ships once docked, and many of the vendors are anxious to share their skills with visitors.
The new Fulton district will have its best foot forward tomorrow until 6 P.M. for a sampling of the area's specialties. Foods, at the five official Fulton eateries, range from German sausages and health and organic foods in steamed and raw seafood and submarine sandwiches. Nautical antiques, fabrics, plants, weavings, exotic leathers and items, in silver, stone and copper are among the wares on display, and there will be demonstrations in creative glass-blowing and trinket-making.
The regular hours for the market are Monday through Friday from 11 A.M. to 6 P.M., and Saturday and Sunday until 7 P.M. More information: 766-9077.

Italian Business Escalates Role in Anti-Communist Party Fight

ALIN SHUSTER
Special to The New York Times

Rome, June 1—An Italian businessman said the other half of the effort to stem Communist influence here is to feed into an anti-Communist campaign here. He said all their efforts have been aimed at the Communist Party in the national elections of June 20.

Recently, Italian businessmen have provided monies to the Christian Democrats but very little to the Communist Party. The view was that the Communist Party belonged to the bankers and industrialists but that view has changed.

It is now the era of the political party, said Alfredo Gardi, the spokesman for the Communist Party, who is also a spokesman for the Communist Party.

Umberto Agnelli, the managing director of Fiat.

more than 300 industrialists are running for office in a rare display of political involvement by Italian businessmen.

Among them are Umberto Agnelli, the managing director of Fiat, and the younger brother of Giovanni, who is president of the giant automobile company; Bruno Visentini, who is expected to take over soon as head of the Confederation of Industrialists; and Mario Corbino, vice president of the confederation and director of the section representing 85,000 small businesses.

Such men have not decided on the same party, although their objective—to keep the Communists out—is the same.

Mr. Agnelli is running for the Christian Democrats, while Mr. Visentini and Mr. Corbino stand for the small but respected Republican party. Giovanni Agnelli considered joining on a ticket backed by three small parties but decided against it.

Although talk of the Agnellis has dominated discussion of industry's role in the elections, it is obvious that

Raytheon to Get a Saudi Missile Order

J. MLDENBERG
Special to The New York Times

Raytheon Company will receive a $1.1 billion order for Hawk anti-aircraft missile systems from Saudi Arabia.

One measure of the magnitude of the order, which was received with an undisclosed down payment, was that Raytheon's total sales in 1975 came to $2.24 billion.

Raytheon's Hawk anti-aircraft missile systems have previously been installed in Spain, Jordan, Kuwait, Taiwan and at United States military bases.

The company, which also produces the Amana line of household appliances, had reported a decline in its first-quarter earnings statement.

At that time, Raytheon reported a profit of $17.9 million, equal to $1.18 a share, compared with $16.9 million, and $1.06 a share, for the first three months of 1975. Sales were listed as $572 million compared with $530 million a year earlier.

However, its order backlog on March 30 was reported at $2.4 billion, off from $2.6 billion on the 1975 date. The Saudi Arabian sale is expected to improve Raytheon's order position.

P. & G. IS PLANNING NEW UNIT IN JAPAN

Talks Begun on Approval for a Subsidiary Without Local Participation.

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
Special to The New York Times

TOKYO—Procter & Gamble, the giant American soap, paper and food manufacturer, will formally apply to the Japanese Government soon to establish a wholly owned subsidiary here.

Officials of the Cincinnati-based company have already begun quiet preliminary discussions with Government officials here to prepare the way for the special approval needed to found a foreign subsidiary in Japan without local participation.

It will be P. & G.'s first such independent operation in Japan, the world's No. 3 industrial power after the United States and the Soviet Union. Until a gradual liberalization in recent years, Japanese authorities had effectively blocked most foreign investment here, including local subsidiaries wholly owned by foreign companies.

Based in Osaka

For the last three years P. & G. has participated in a joint Japanese venture called Procter & Gamble Sunhome. That company, based in Osaka, has been importing Camay soap and producing locally four toilet soaps as well as six specialized Japanese detergents.

"We are still a very small factor in the total Japanese detergent market," said Jack Nedell, president of the joint venture.

Company officials were reluctant to discuss the new corporate proposal in detail. "We're trying to do things the Japanese way," one said. "We are meeting with all interested agencies to explain our proposals fully so that no one will be surprised when we formally apply."

However, it was learned that the new company, to be called Procter & Gamble Japan, will import its parent company's existing products. They will also provide valuable opportunities for detailed research on the lucrative consumer market of 111 million Japanese.

"We're not sure right now which products are worth pursuing here," one company official said.

Will Handle Distribution

Initially at least, the existing joint venture, whose Japanese partners did not want to broaden their involvement outside cars and trucks, will handle product distribution for the new company.

The new company's products will fall into three basic categories: toiletry items, such as toothpaste, hair preparations, deodorants and mouthwash; paper products, such as toilet paper, towels, facial tissues and disposable diapers, and foods, such as shortening, peanut butter and potato chips.

Arab-U.S. Bank Joins City Influx

Kevin G. Woelflein of Arab American Bank.

By ANN CRITTENDEN

While manufacturing companies by the dozen have been fleeing New York City, foreign banks have been moving in the opposite direction, seeking to establish themselves in the city that more than ever is viewed as the world's financial capital.

The latest is the oatioo's first jointly owned Arab and American bank, scheduled to open this month at a discreet, eighth-floor office at 345 Park Avenue, near 51st Street.

The new institution, the UBAF Arab American Bank, is a consortium formed by 11 Arab banks, the Union de Banques Arabes et Françaises and four of its affiliates, and four American bank-holding companies—the Bankers Trust New York Corporation, the First Chicago Corporation, the Security Pacific Corporation and Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc.

While Arab and Western banks have formed joint venture banks around the world in recent years, this will be the first to open for business in the United States.

The formation of the UBAF bank has been in the works for at least two years, but its arrival coincides with a dramatic upsurge in the number of foreign banks seeking to establish operations in New York.

According to the New York State Banking Department, some nine new agencies, branches or subsidiaries of foreign banks were authorized between the end of 1974 and the present, for a total of 118 entities, representing 78 foreign banks.

And in the last two or three weeks alone, a banking official says, 10 or 12 more banks have expressed an interest in opening in New York City. In his view, the rush may reflect not only the economic upturn and the conviction among foreign bankers that the United States is currently one of the world's most stable countries, both economically and politically, but also a movement to begin operations in this country before the passage of legislation restricting the operations of foreign banks in the United States.

The UBAF bank's "strongest point," according to Kevin G. Woelflein, its president, lies in its backers, who constitute a who's who of Middle Eastern finance.

Synthetic Motor Oil Reported Gaining In Sales Despite Its Sharply Higher Cost

By WILLIAM D. SMITH

As the nation's drivers look down the road over the Memorial Day weekend, more cars than ever before were using synthetic motor oil, rather than a conventional engine lubricant refined directly from crude oil.

How many more? No one is sure. The market is as yet undefined, but it is thought by analysts to be at least in the several million-dollar annual range. The potential market is down the oil and reconstructing it into molecular structure that provides specific performance benefits.

Synthetic cost three to six times as much as conventional motor oils. Mobil 1 has a suggested list price of $3.95 a quart compared with, for instance, $1 a quart for conventional oil.

The cost of breaking down the oil and reconstructing it into the new structure is the chief reason for the higher cost of synthetic oil.

What does the buyer get for the higher price? Mobil contends that its synthetic oils the average car to go up to 10 extra miles a tankful of gasoline, reduces oil consumption up to 25 percent in engines

A production model automobile being tested with a synthetic engine lubricant at the Mobil Research and Development Laboratories in Paulsboro, N.J.

Small companies in Market

In addition, some smaller companies, such as Amzoll Inc., Enco Inc. and Eon Inc. have been marketing general-purpose synthetic motor oil for several years.

Both synthetic and conventional motor oils are petroleum-based. Conventional motor oils are refined to desired specifications and additives are put in the mix to improve performance. The process of creating synthetic oil involves breaking down the oil and reconstructing it into molecular structure that provides specific performance benefits.

Unbranded Supermarket Products Are Stirring Debate in France

By CLYDE H. FARNSWORTH
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, May 28—Though the public seems to like it so far, retailers and advertisers have been thrown into an uproar by a campaign of France's largest supermarket chain to sell unbranded products at prices below those with brand names.

For the last two months the Carrefour chain, which had sales of $1.5 billion last year, has been displaying the 2 to 30 percent cheaper items, wrapped in nondescript white labels, on shelves next to branded goods.

The practice is an old one in the United States, where supermarkets long have sold their own house brands alongside nationally advertised products.

Idea Arouses Debate

But in France, where the rules of advertising and distribution are more conservative, the idea of freeing products from advertising and packaging costs is a new one and has stirred a searing debate.

The plan undermines the very basis of the free-enterprise system and has done more to pave the way for a socialist society than all the leaders of the Communist Party taken together," according to Jean Mothes, a director of the company that makes Perrier bottled mineral water.

"The brand name is absolutely essential," added the marketing director of Germain-Danone, which makes dairy products. "What mother would give her child no matter what anonymous yogurt?" he asked.

"It represents perfidious competition," said Alain Agnelli, president of the National Union of French Advertisers.

Carrefour, which has 36 supermarkets, mainly on the outskirts of large French towns, has spent $5 million on advertising its unbranded bargains.

Advertising agencies have denounced the publicity (products without a name are just as good and cheaper) as one theme; as false and misleading, and manufacturers' associations have tried, unsuccessfully, to organize a boycott to cut off the company's sources of supply.

Carrefour is run by Marcel Fournier, a 62-year-old former merchant in the French town of Annecy who built the chain into one of the strongest selling organizations in Europe. Far from advocating a Communist society, Mr. Fournier is considered a pillar of French capitalist society.

He said Etienne Thil, his marketing chief and a former

Fed Moves Called 'Tactical'—Few Expect Dow to Top 1,100 by Labor Day

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN

The stock market, after a sizzling start in early 1976, has stagnated for the last three months to the immense puzzlement of investors.

By late February, the Dow Jones industrial had boomed nearly 17 percent above last year's close—an astonishing spurt in such a short time—to challenge the 1,000 level. But by last Friday the blue-chip average was down to 975.23. And if the bull market wasn't over, it certainly appeared to have gone into hiding.

So what is Wall Street saying about market prospects between now and Labor Day, a period that will embrace the national political conventions? In retrospect, it appears many observers simply set their sights too high. They were swept along by the beady volume that accompanied the surging stock prices of January and February. But the record daily average of more than 30 million shares early this year has troubled back to 18 million.

Rise Forecast Earlier

Some analysts earlier quoted the Wall Street dictum that "January sets the tone for the year," and they blithely forecast 1,200 or better on the Dow by Labor Day. But today, nobody seems to envisage a target above 1,100.

"What we've got," declared one economist, "is a nice orderly business expansion, and the market simply got ahead of the recovery."

In 1972, the business community was petrified by what it viewed as the soak-the-rich platform of Senator George McGovern, the Democratic nominee, but as far as any political coloration is concerned, the uncertainty of this year's election outcome has not seriously affected the market so far. At worst, observers maintain, it has acted as a mild depressant.

Tilford C. Gaines, senior vice president and economist for Manufacturers Hanover Trust, is making this assessment: "I can't really distinguish any philosophical difference between President Ford and the other two leading candidates, Ronald Reagan and Jimmy Carter. If, on the other hand, either Hubert H. Humphrey or Edward Kennedy heads the Democratic ticket, then the stock market would react adversely."

If politics aren't troubling the market, what's the problem? Kevin Bradley, research director of Bache Hays Stuart, pinpoints the sensitivity of stocks to interest rate changes and the monetary policy of the Federal Reserve.

"The market," he says, "has

Top Funds Still Outperform S. & P.

By ROBERT METZ

The performance of the best-run mutual funds over the last 10 years hardly inspires confidence. The most one can say is that the best mutual funds have consistently outperformed the stock market in recent years.

For instance, the broadly based Standard & Poor's index of 500 stocks recorded a gain of 37.6 percent in the period beginning Jan. 1, 1966, and ending Dec. 31, 1975—all dividends assumed reinvested.

At least eight of the nation's major mutual funds did at least as well as the S&P over the same period. But only two of the eight recorded gains exceeding the pace of inflation during the 10 years, a period when the cost-of-living index rose 74.3 percent.

Those two funds were the T. Rowe Price New Horizons Fund, up 108.4 percent and Pioneer Fund, up 84.3 percent. The record of the New Horizons Fund is especially interesting. This fund, which concentrates on stocks of companies that appear to be growing with unusual rapidity, showed a gain of 573.3 percent in the 10 years ended Dec. 31, 1975.

That was by far the best 10-year gain of any of the 10 best performing funds. But in 1973 and 1974, when the bear market was at its worst, the fund lost most of its gains as the market proved particularly hard on the kinds of companies favored by the fund.

much funds and the handicapped investor. The charge, which averages 8 1/2 percent, does affect performance—at least in the early years.

But the record of the top 10 funds clearly suggests that over the long term, the sales charge fades in significance. The most successful fund, the New Horizons Fund, is a no-load vehicle, but the fund in second place, Pioneer, is a load fund.

In all, three of the funds are no-load funds—the two Rowe Price funds and Babson—and the rest charge sales fees. Most of the funds in the list are known as growth funds—they seek better-than-average gains through investments in stocks in companies expected to grow more quickly than the average.

The 10 top-performing mutual funds represent some of the largest now in business. The biggest is the $1.234-billion investment company of America, and the smallest is the $197-million Babson Investment Fund.

The table below shows the percentage gains of the 10 top funds for successive 10-year periods beginning with that of Jan. 1, 1960, through 1969 and ending with the period Jan. 1, 1966, through 1975. The figures, which are compared with the gains of the S. & P. index's Eberstadt & Company from data by Fundscope Magazine and Arthur Wiesenberger & Company, both monitors of mutual fund performance.

CAR OUTPUT PLANNED AT 30-MONTH PEAK

DETROIT, May 31 (AP)—Barring any shutdowns because of the lengthy rubber strike, the nation's automakers plan to assemble 849,000 new cars in June, the industry's highest output in 30 months.

The auto companies, which have been shipping cars without spare tires to dealers for the last several weeks to conserve depleting stocks, say they expect to operate normally during June, even if the strike by 60,000 members of the United Rubber Workers nearing its seventh week continues.

Ward's said the June schedule included production of 484,000 cars by General Motors Corp., 221,000 by the Ford Motor Company, 125,000 by the Chrysler Corporation and 19,000 by the American Motors Corporation. G.M. built 437,000 cars in May, Ford 198,000, Chrysler 118,000 and AMC 21,000—a total of 774,000, according to Ward's.

Success Seekers: You're better off in New Jersey.

There must be a reason why 450 of the nation's top 500 companies have operations in New Jersey.

If you're in industry, New Jersey means higher worker productivity. You get more for your wage-paying dollar.

Some of the other reasons why New Jersey is America's profit center? A huge labor market. Prime industrial property with full services. Remarkable location. The finest transportation complex in the world. A favorable tax structure. Financial assistance programs. And a great place to have fun and raise a family.

For commercial enterprises, New Jersey offers highly competitive cost-per-square-foot office space. Plus a pool of willing and well-trained office personnel to run your operations. And a fine choice of residential communities as well as commuting that's less of a burden. Much less.

PSE&G's reason for bringing all these facts to your attention is a desire to match New Jersey's skilled workers with new job opportunities. Everyone benefits.

If you're planning a move, send for PSE&G's "You're Better Off in New Jersey" success-seeker's kit. It includes a 78-page, fully illustrated New Jersey Fact Book, an 80-page office space guide, a folder describing the free services you get from PSE&G's area development experts, and an industrial parks portfolio describing prime locations. It won't take you long to see why you're better off in New Jersey. Mail the coupon today. Please attach to your business letterhead.

Cutty 12 Takes On Chivas Regal

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

The Buckingham Corporation, importer of Cutty Sark Scotch, will begin today its promotion in certain major markets of Cutty 12 by taking on Chivas Regal, Seagram's dominant entry in the deluxe Scotch field.

A four-color ad appearing in Newsweek shows Cutty 12 being poured into a familiar Chivas Regal bottle under the headline, "How to improve a bottle of Chivas Regal."

"The strategy writes itself," explained Victor Lynn, managing supervisor at Scali, McCabe, Sloves, Buckingham's new agency. "In the growing 12-year-old Scotch category, Chivas is practically the category. What is its vulnerability? The area of taste. We've got a brand that beats Chivas taste."

"Snobs like to order Chivas in a bar, but they don't necessarily like the taste," added Edward A. Horrigan Jr., chairman and president of Buckingham, a subsidiary of Northwest Industries.

The tagline in all advertising will be "Cutty 12. The 12-year-old that tastes even better."

The second ad in the campaign, which will run also in Time and U.S. News & World Report and in eight newspapers in six cities, will have as its headline, "It's high time a 12-year-old Scotch acquired your taste. Instead of vice versa."

The copy promises a smoother, more elegant taste that you can enjoy "without experiencing an unenviable period of adjustment."

Mr. Horrigan, an alumnus of Lipton tea and Procter & Gamble, was interviewed at his agency and explained why and how Buckingham got into the 12-year-old deluxe, or super premium, Scotch business.

The premium Scotch bottled in Scotland and blended from whiskies not more than four years old and not more than eight—are what built the Scotch market, he said. J&B leads with estimated sales of 2.6 million cases a year, followed by Cutty Sark with 2.4 million.

The popularity of the premium brands led to the introduction of the deluxe and bulk brands—bottled in the United States, and sold at a lower price.

The total market, he said, has slipped from a growth rate of from 4 to 6 percent a year to about 2 percent.

In 1974, adding to the general economic woes, Scotch had its largest price increase, which caused many premium drinkers to trade down to bunks.

"The 12-year-olds," Mr. Horrigan said, "remained insulated."

With the premiums under attack at both ends and the growth of the market slowed so the growth of any one brand must come from the loss by another, Buckingham decided to protect itself on one end.

"It was our feeling that while we'll fight a battle in the premium area, we had a

Air Training Command To D'Arcy-MacManus

D'Arcy-MacManus & Masius has retained the Air Force recruiting account and has been awarded a $4-million cost-plus contract by the Air Training Command.

It has been handling the service branch's advertising for 18 years and the contract is for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 with options to renew for from one to four additional years.

Altogether, 90 agencies submitted bids for the business and there were eight finalists. It is understood that they included Grey Advertising, Young & Rubicam, Bozell & Jacobs, McCann-Erickson and Tracey-Loche.

rightful place in the 12-year-old category," Mr. Horrigan said.

He estimates that Chivas sales are about 900,000 cases a year, with J&B's Walker Black Label in second place with about 450,000.

"Our attitude is that we might as well be there," he added.

Once the decision was made to take on Chivas in the area of taste, Berry Brothers & Rudd, the British company that blends Cutty Sark, was asked to supply blends of 12-year-olds within specific taste areas. It came up with three that were tested by American consumer panels.

The winner went into a specially designed "squat bottle" (Chivas has a squat bottle) that went into a squat golden box (Chivas has a squat silver box). Both were sprinkled liberally with renditions of the legendary clipper ship and then the product was introduced last March in California, Colorado and Maryland. Chicago and Texas were added in September.

Now it's in major markets, including New York, which represent 75 percent of the Scotch market. By using split runs in the news magazines, Cutty 12 advertising will appear only in those markets while Cutty Sark ads will appear in the rest of the circulation. Cutty 12's ad spending is at an annual rate of $3 million. Chivas is spending more.

When Cutty 12 was introduced, Buckingham had Lois Holland, Callaway as its agency and the introductory ads used Rex Harrison, the actor, to present the taste story.

With the new campaign, Scali, McCabe, Sloves is adding to its reputation for tough, competitive selling.

Saturday Review Seeks Loan Norman Cousins, whose Saturday Review made a brand name with "See Ya, Baker," president of the CHC Corporation, about CHC's guaranteeing a $1.75 million loan. The agreement would include a five-year option for CHC to acquire the bi-monthly magazine.

Much of the money would be used to promote Saturday Review, which carried 501 pages in advertising last year, down from 635 in 1974. For the first half of this year the page count is 280, an increase from the 255 carried during the 1975 period.

CHC, based in Towson, Md., publishes Los Angeles and American West magazines, scientific and medical textbooks and contemporary religious rock music.

Mr. Cousins said that his 52-year-old magazine had gotten down to a hard-core circulation of 500,000, of which 95.5 percent are full-rate subscriptions. That kind of readership is one of the things that his promotion advertising would play up to the advertising community.

Singer Co. Chooses Scali

The Singer Company, which last March decided to leave Grey Advertising and do the advertising for its United States Sewing Products division in-house to save money, has named Scali, McCabe, Sloves to do its creative work.

Singer will do the marketing planning and buy local newspaper ad space. National advertising in all media will be bought by the Media Corporation of America, which has been working for Singer since March.

According to Edward D. T. Trevor, vice president for advertising, a number of agencies were interviewed before the Scali selection. Some declined to compete for a creative-only assignment.

TV Spending Survey A survey of brand and product managers has disclosed that half of them thought they would be spending less for television advertising and more for radio in 1981.

That information was delivered amid gasps of happiness last week by Ramon Gaulke, president of Marsteller, to a luncheon of radio people.

The agency sent 620 questionnaires and received 126 responses. The responses also showed that 43 percent of the managers guessed they would be spending more for print advertising. And, interestingly enough, 62 percent believed that advertising creativity was at the same level as five years ago while 27 percent thought it was up.

in good mechanical condition, provides faster subzero starting and excellent hot-weather performance, keeps engines cleaner and reduces engine wear."

Other manufacturers, such as Amsoil, contend their products reduce the need to change oil from every 5,000 miles to every 25,000 miles.

The market success of the synthetics to date is hard to judge. Mobil says that response thus far has been "very encouraging and better than anticipated."

However, a spot check of several Mobil stations in the greater New York area indicated that, although there had been considerable interest in the product, there had been no stampede to put it into car engines.

"A number of people who are really interested in their cars have come in asking a lot of questions and some have bought it," a Bergeco County, N.J., Mobil dealer said. "Others just nod their head and listen."

There appears to be no rush by the other major oil companies to follow Mobil's lead, either.

"Current motor oils exceed all automotive requirements, while synthetics cost four to six times as much as the refined product," the Exxon Corporation, the nation's largest oil company, said.

There is additional room for improvements in traditional motor oils through additive technology at much less cost to consumers. In addition, synthetics require 10 times as much energy in their manufacture as traditional petroleum oil.

Texaco Inc., the nation's second largest oil company, said that it had had an active research and development program in the field for many years and was currently marketing such lubricants for use in aircraft engines, "where the application demands and economies to users are favorable."

Contentions of improved performance claims for synthetics, challenged by some critics. Others, while not denying the performance claims for synthetics, contend that the cost to customers is not worth the benefit.

Mobil said its statements about performance benefits of the new synthetics were based on more than 1.5 million miles of engine and vehicle fleet testing in American and foreign-made cars.

On the other hand, a study by the research laboratories of the General Motors Corporation concluded, "In general the synthetic engine oils showed no advantage over the conventional engine oils."

While the debate may be technical, the battle will ultimately be fought in the marketplace. Mobil is backing up its product with a nationwide multimillion-dollar television and newspaper advertising campaign.

Probably the most difficult single problem facing the proponents of the synthetics is refusal of the automobile manufacturers to change their warranty criteria.

The car makers all say that the warranty will remain in force if the synthetic oil meets the specifications of the Society of Automotive Engineers. However, some of the synthetics now do this. The oil must still be changed at the designated interval, which usually runs every 5,000 to 7,000 miles depending on the make of car.

Beyond this, there is the general question of how many motorists are willing to make a larger capital commitment for motor oil even if it could save money in the long run.

Synthetic motor oils are not new. F.W. Sullivan of the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) had an active research program on them in the 1930's. And the German Army used synthetic lubricants for their tanks in Russia after discovering that conventional oil jelled in the extreme cold.

ARAB-U.S. BANK

Arab country, and in the central banks of Morocco and Oman, as well as five other institutions led by Arab government authorities, according to an official of the New York Banking Department, are expected to use the bank as a funnel for Arab investment in the United States, with the bank's staff providing management services for investments ranging from short-term market deposits and States Treasury bills to long-term direct investment.

On the other hand, the bank is expected to act as a window into the Middle East for American corporations, according to Mr. Woelflein, who came to the bank a few months ago after successfully opening a Tokyo branch for Citicorp.

Mr. Woelflein can introduce them to potential shareholders, and find out who can advise them on investment opportunities in the Middle East. Mr. Woelflein said he expected that the project financing would be concentrated in oil, steel and chemical industries.

Other Activities Planned
The bank's activities are still uncertain, according to Mr. Woelflein, whether Arab money coming into the country will provide the most business for the new bank, which will also handle other wholesale commercial activities as well, from financing to foreign-exchange transactions.

Companies tell me it's very difficult to get quotes on Arab securities here," Mr. Woelflein said, "so we also plan to make markets in the major currencies."

New York State has already passed legislation requiring banks to "adhere to principles of equality and nondiscrimination" in their employment and lending practices, and by coincidence, UBAF Arab American is the first incoming bank to include a statement to that effect in its organizational charter.

In addition, each of the 20 shareholder banks had to submit a written pledge that it would comply with the law. The American Jewish Congress, which had expressed concern about the establishment of the bank by governments that enforce the Arab boycott against Jews, subsequently said that it was satisfied with the assurances.

'No Way' on Politics
There is no way politics should enter into this," Mr. Woelflein said. "Can you imagine four of the largest American banks getting involved in something like that?"

As if to further allay any fears of Arab domination of the bank, half of its directors and five members of its executive committee, including Mr. Woelflein, who is chairman, are Americans, although the 11 Arab bank shareholders own 84 percent of the common stock.

UBAF, itself a consortium of 16 Arab banking and financial institutions and three French banks, and its affiliates hold 16 percent of the stock. The four American banks hold 3 percent each and their combined ownership of 20 percent represents the single largest concentration of ownership in any one country.

The second largest concentration of ownership in a single country would be in Egypt, with two banks holding a total of 14 percent of the new bank's shares.

Access to $100 Million
The bank will be capitalized at $25 million, plus $3.58 million of subordinated debt and $22,000 in directors' contributions. The bank will also have access to an additional $100 million on standby as backup if the bank requires it.

The shareholders' agreement provides that each of the four American banks will sell UBAF Arab American $15 million in loans, and Mr. Woelflein says he hopes to double that amount of loans on the books by the end of 1976.

He recognizes, however, that the task will not be easy. He sees the bank's legal lending limit of 10 percent of capital and surplus to any one borrower—or $2.8 million—as his biggest problem, for it will prohibit the bank from taking on any major projects by itself.

He also acknowledges that if the bank's multinational character is its greatest strength, it could prove to be one of its handicaps as well, as in decisions on allocating credit among projects in different countries.

Decision-making takes longer than with boards of a single nationality and, to maintain a careful balance, the board will meet in different capitals in the next nine months. And UBAF Arab American may well be the only private enterprise in the world that has three simultaneous-translation booths, for English, Arabic and French, built into the boardroom so that the directors can speak to one another in the same language.

ONE MILLION KIDS
THE FRESH AIR FUND

Noses out the News.

When Newsweek can do more for you than the ABC, NBC and CBS Evening News combined, it's time to question an all-TV schedule.

If you buy all three early evening network news programs, you've got yourself a nice rating. And a quality audience.

Work out a TV/print mix of news programs and Newsweek.

Newsweek, it may surprise you to know, gets a rating of 19.4 (men 18 to 49). And that beats the CBS News with Walter Cronkite. ABC News with Harry Reasoner and the NBC Nightly News with John Chancellor combined.

In fact, among men 18 to 49 with household incomes of $20,000+, Newsweek's rating beats all three network news programs plus Meet the Press, Face the Nation, and Issues and Answers.

Sound unbelievable? Just have your media department check out the figures.

With television's rising costs and limited availabilities, magazines like Newsweek make more sense than ever.

You get the same kind of ratings you expect from TV—and at a lower cost per thousand. In other words, more gross rating points for your money.

But what's even more important is the quality audience you're reaching. With Newsweek you reach more people who are heavy magazine readers and relatively light TV viewers—the important market now known as "magazine imperatives."

This group includes 45% of all men 18 to 49, 54% of the men with household incomes of over $20,000 and almost half of all professional/managerial men.

The "magazine imperatives" account for 41.9% of all the life insurance purchased by men, 43.6% of all the new cars, 53.5% of the radial tires, and almost half of all the table wine.

The way to get your story across to this important market is to shift a portion of your TV dollars to Newsweek.

Unbranded Retail Items Stir a Debate in France

France's largest coffee manufacturer, the Jacques Vabre Company, agreed to supply the nameless coffee. "On balance, the concern has gained substantial sales and is very happy with our plan," Mr. Thil said.

Have the branded products lost out? It may be too early to say, but one company, a maker of food pastes under the brand name of Croix de Savoie, said: "In the 16 Carrefour supermarkets that we supply our sales in April were down 50 percent. But our sales to the competitors of Carrefour are higher. What we are seeing is simply a reshuffling of the cards."

Procter & Gamble Is Planning To Set Up Japan Subsidiary not new for P. & G., which has about $6 billion in sales and manufacturing, importing or other contract arrangements in more than 100 countries.

The two biggest manufacturers in the large Japanese soap and detergent industry are Kao and the Lion Fats and Oils Company.

But they, like Procter & Gamble Sunbome and the other soap companies, are still experiencing the severe effects of Japan's worst recession in 25 years. Last year, P. & G. soap and detergent industry sales in Japan were down 30 percent from the 1974 level.

"There are signs that things are bottoming out," one soap manufacturer said, "but it's still very difficult."

It was especially difficult for the new American joint venture, which began operations in Japan just as the effects of the 1973 energy crisis were touching off inflation and the recession here.

Last year, however, Procter & Gamble Sunbome bought out the bankrupt Mitsuwa Soap Company and will soon begin local production of Camay.

The company's other products include a heavy-duty liquid laundry detergent, and Cheer, the same basic American laundry powder with a revised formula to suit Japanese washing habits and water hardness.

Procter and Gamble officials said that under existing liberalized Government policies they expected prompt approval of the new corporation.

Formal application will be made to the Ministry of International Trade and Industry, which passes the application along for consideration by other appropriate Government agencies.

The procedure can take only a few weeks. However, in some particularly sensitive industrial areas, such as chemicals, it has taken months to settle the resulting disputes.

TEHRAN, Iran, May 31 (AP)—Iran and the British Steel Corporation have signed a $1-billion deal for construction of a steel mill at Isfahan in central Iran. The five-year project to build the country's third mill will be financed by Iran, a company announced yesterday after the signing ceremony said.

British Steel will handle blueprints, supervise construction and train Iranians, it reported. The agreement was signed by Dr. Reza Armin, director of the national Iranian steel industry, and Sir Montague Finniston, chairman of British Steel.

Iran's first mill was constructed by the Soviet Union in an exchange for $750 million worth of natural gas. The new steel mill will be the second one in Isfahan.

New York City to Rebuild Part of Hudson Parkway

Neither project will encroach on the park. The other job, now scheduled for completion next January, involves repair and reconstruction of a steel viaduct and concrete decking between 72d and 81st Streets. This is the stretch where the six-lane parkway structure runs atop Corral's depressed West Side freight line.

According to Sally Goodgold, the community board's task force chairman for reconstruction of the highway, the community would be able to inspect plans fully before the city could advertise for bids on the 96th Street interchange work. The project involves rebuilding the viaduct carrying the three northbound lanes in that area. The viaduct now is closed off, and for a 10-block stretch, from 90th to 100th Street, the six-lane highway narrows to four lanes.

Mrs. Goodgold said that there would be no interruption to through-traffic during construction. Nineteen trees would have to be removed, she said, but 22 would be planted. Community Board is insisting on the same protection of the park and walkways that it had sought for the $10.6 million Federal-aid project under way since last summer.

The work site between 72d and 81st Streets is screened from park visitors by a plywood fence painted green. Because of the cramped quarters, small cranes powered "buggies" carry concrete to hoppers to areas where the new pavement is being laid. Dominick Di Gangi, assistant to the state engineer in charge, said that a new six-lane pavement with a raised median divider should be ready "some time in December." But completion of work on ramps at 72d and 79th Streets may not be possible before January, he added.

The opening of the new six-lane stretch of pavement, which will be topped by two and a half inches of asphalt, will allow the complicated detour, which for months has raised hackles on Riverside Drive, to be ended. There are now only two lanes of parkway open between 72d and 81st Streets—reversible lanes, southbound in the morning and northbound in the evening.

Corroded Supports Exposed
The contractor, Karl Koch Erecting Company of Carteret, N.J., has been working high over the active railroad tracks. The crumbling concrete pavement on the northbound side of the parkway has been stripped away, exposing many corroded steel horizontal supports and longitudinal "stringers," ranging from 13 to 36 feet in length and weighing up to 3,000 pounds. So far, 500,000 pounds of steel supports have been replaced after the new concrete has been laid on the northbound lanes in July, the contractor will tear out and rebuild the southbound lanes. But two lanes will still be available on a reversible basis for daily traffic.

The rebuilding project north of 72d Street will involve widening of the parkway, which has tended to defuse tensions in the Riverside Park community. But south of 72d Street, where the same roadway is known as the elevated West Side Highway, new battles seem to be shaping over the city's plan to demolish part of the deteriorated old structure.

Some community groups have protested sharply against the city's announced plan to tear down a 17-block section of the ransackable elevated highway between Jane Street in Greenwich Village and 26th Street. The groups have urged the Federal Highway Administration to block the demolition on the ground that it is a clear move toward building an Interstate highway or boulevard, or both, despite bitter community opposition.

Community Planning Board 2, covering the area from Canal to 14th Street, and various Greenwich Village organizations have been fighting against any type of "big road" as the replacement for the old elevated highway. They would oppose a very wide boulevard along West Street and 12th Avenue once the elevated structure has been removed from those streets.

Because of its shaky condition, the structure has been closed to traffic south of 48th Street for more than two years. Traffic on a temporary four-lane detour beneath the elevated structure has reached 47,000 vehicles a day, which is a 50 percent increase in a year.

John E. Zucconi, First Deputy Mayor, has said that the 17-block section of the elevated structure is a serious safety hazard. But he has refused to issue a guarantee that West Street and 12th Avenue would be limited to four moving lanes of traffic once the elevated structure had been torn down. The streets are wide enough to accommodate six and eight lanes of traffic after the elevated supports are removed.

The basic city-state plan calls for replacing the old elevated highway with a controversial six-lane Interstate highway, which has been dubbed "Westway." It would extend from the Battery to 42d Street along the same corridor, narrowing through new landfill on the Hudson River along much of the way.

Mayor Beame and Governor Carey have also asked the Federal Government to extend the designated Interstate corridor all the way to 72d Street. But the Federal Government has taken no action. Board 7 is vehemently opposed to any extension of the Interstate to 72d Street, and has joined Board 2 in assailing any Interstate at all.

William Bowser, chairman of the West Side Ad Hoc Committee Against the Interstate Highway, said that the city-state plan to start dismantling the 17-block stretch of elevated highway in September was "a pressure move for those who want Westway." He also denounced "Westway" as a "scheme to fill the pockets" of real estate developers who, he said, want to put up housing along and on the projected 80-acre landfill. According to Arthur Stollar, the transportation chairman of Board 2, his board would not oppose the demolition if it could be assured of nothing bigger than a four-lane roadway (and perhaps a bikeway) on West Street—in other words, a local road that would not attract new waves of traffic.

On the other hand, Aston Glaves, chairman of Board 4 (14th to 59th Street on the West Side) said that his group was opposed to any dismantling of the elevated highway north of 14th Street. Some powerful longshoremen's groups fear that any demolition north of 14th Street would be the first step toward demolishing the Chelsea-area piers. Board 4 has approved the "Westway" Interstate on the condition that it is extended to 72d Street (and does not add to Lincoln Tunnel-area snarls by ending at 42d Street); and only if provisions were made for the Chelsea piers.

Lowell K. Bridwell, head of the city-state planning group that is preparing the final application to the Federal Government for approval of the location of "Westway" said that the document would include the final environmental impact statement for the entire West Side corridor. Due for submission to Washington in July or August, it would also cover the effects of the demolition of the old highway, he said.

A suit brought in Federal Court to block the city and state from going ahead with "Westway" or other "big roads" on the West Side has been temporarily set aside. The plaintiffs, a coalition of about 30 community and environmental groups, contend that the city and state plans are in clear violation of Federal clean-air standards. But they entered into an agreement recently with the city and state to withhold further action until the Federal Highway Administration had decided on the "Westway" application, provided, meanwhile, that "the status quo is maintained."

TORNADO FUNNEL AND JET AIRLINER seem to be dangerously close as approach to Stapleton airport yesterday. Tornado caused extensive damage to Adams County Farm and at other areas throughout the Denver area, without incident. Another tornado touched down at Broken Arrow, Okla. and causing major damage to property.

Weather Reports and Forecast

Summary

Cloudy weather with intermittent showers and thunderstorms for the metropolitan area today, as part of a large area of precipitation scattered over most of the nation east of the Mississippi. Showers will also be scattered over the Pacific Northwest into the northern Plateau, with widely scattered showers and thunderstorms likely to extend through Wyoming into the Dakotas and Nebraska. The remainder of the nation will be mostly sunny, with cooler temperatures occurring in northern New England and the lake region, with little change in temperatures elsewhere.

Sunny skies and seasonably warm temperatures were enjoyed in the metropolitan area yesterday. Thunderstorms moved through southeast Texas and southwest Louisiana, bringing locally heavy rains and gusty winds to the region. Thunderstorms intensified over southern Florida during the morning hours. Other showers and thundershowers were scattered over the southern Ohio Valley, northern Oklahoma and the Texas Panhandle. Showers continued to be scattered over much of the Pacific Northwest. Partly cloudy to cloudy skies predominated elsewhere.

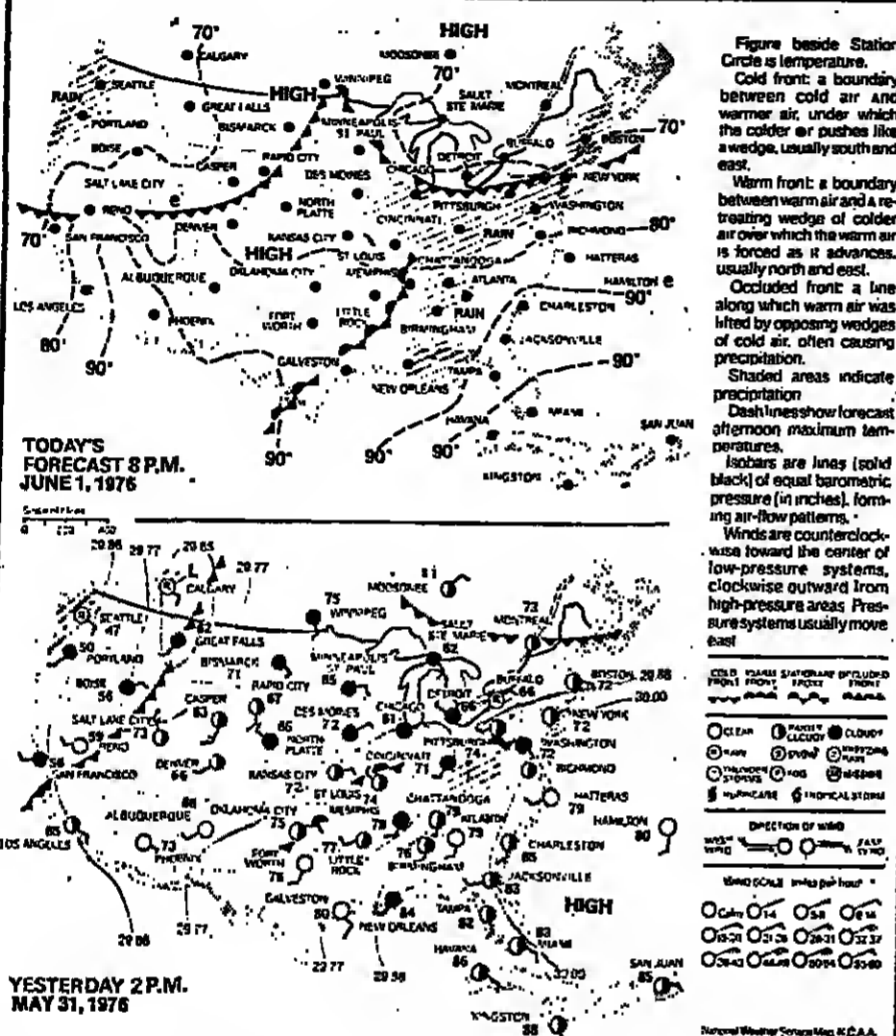

Figure beside Station Circle indicates: Cold front a boundary between cold air and warmer air under which the cold air wedges, usually southward and east. Warm front a boundary between warmer air and a trailing wedge of colder air over which the warm air is forced as it advances, usually north and east. Occluded front a line along which warm air is forced as it advances, usually north and east. Shaded areas indicate precipitation. Dashed lines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures. Isobars are lines (solid black) of equal barometric pressure (in inches), forming an isobaric pattern. Winds are counter-clockwise toward the center of low-pressure systems, clockwise outward from high-pressure areas. Pressure systems usually move east. Ocean: O Clouds: C Fog: F Ice: I Snow: S. Direction of wind shown by arrow. Speed in miles per hour. Symbols for weather conditions: Partly cloudy, mostly cloudy, overcast, etc.

of the City's Broadcasting System Is in Doubt

LES BROWN The proposal is opposed by such former directors of the Municipal Broadcasting System as Seymour Siegel, and Morris Novick, who say it would be a "giveaway" of a valuable resource.

an audience below measurable standards in the local ratings. In January, the city began considering proposals for the disposition of the stations.

The Opposing View Detractors of this education plan say that WNET's motive is to prevent the emergence of an aggressive public television competitor.

ET/13, the established television station in the area, has made proposal through organization, the Broadcasting Corporation.

The Background Municipal broadcasting has been an institution unique to New York City for half a century.

Proponents of the WNET View In light of the severe cutbacks in the City University budget, and the possibility that tuition will have to be charged, the use of television for higher education and professional training would enable the city to continue its tradition of providing opportunities for the underprivileged.

The Outlook WNET has asked the city to fund a one-year feasibility study for its plan, estimating the cost at $60,000. There will be time for such a study because the licenses of all three WNYC stations have been withheld by the Federal Communications Commission as a result of a petition to deny renewal filed last year.

They did well by our numbers. And so do our advertisers

We received thousands of correct answers, but these five were the lucky ones selected from our random drawing.

If you weren't among the winners, there's still something you can win as an advertiser: an entire market of young, affluent consumers.

Our numbers should tell you one thing: PT readers know what they want in life, and go after it. Whether it's a car in their driveway, a vacation in the sun, stock in America, or a cellar full of wine.

They live their dreams today, not tomorrow.

If these are the kind of people you dream about reaching, you can't help but win with PT.
